STRETCHING THE LIMITS

Revolutionary breakthroughs in technology are rare. Most of today's technology is the result of evolution, the application of human ingenuity to the solution of practical problems. At Fluor we apply engineering skills to achieve evolutionary improvements in the energy industry. We have contributed a number of "firsts" to modern process technology.

Our work in the design of refineries, gas processing plants, shale oil facilities and tar sands projects offers a challenging future as we strive for further breakthroughs.

If you are graduating with a degree in Mechanical, Chemical, Civil or Electrical Engineering, we can offer you the resources and support to become an energy engineer. Our in-house MBA and training programs supplement your engineering knowledge. Our training helps bridge the gap between school and industry so you can handle the diverse challenges of domestic and international process technology. The rest is up to you.

If you would like to know more about career opportunities at Fluor, please send your resume to: Karen Sievers, Fluor Engineers & Constructors, Inc., Houston Division, 4620 N. Braeswood, Houston, Texas 77096.

We will be interviewing on campus March 11 for Mechanical, Electrical, Civil and Chemical Computer Science Building Construction BBA - Management/Marketing disciplines.

Astronomers find galaxies 10 billion light years away

United Press International
BERKELEY, Calif. — The discovery of two distant galaxies has given scientists a chance to look back in time toward the very beginning of the universe, and their observations support the big bang theory of its creation, astronomers reported today.

The galaxies, both larger than the Milky Way system and the "farthest out" ever found by scientists, are 10 billion light years away, meaning information now reaching earth shows them as they existed 10 billion years ago.

Data from the two galaxies supports the big-bang theory, which contends the universe began 18 billion years ago with a primordial explosion, forming stars and galaxies from expanding gases, a report issued today said.

The discovery means that astronomers "are looking more than half way back in time toward the moment that many believe marks the beginning of the universe," said the report by astronomers Hyron Spinrad of the University of California and Harvey Butcher of the Kitt Peak National Observatory in Arizona.

Eventually, scientists may get to the very edge of the universe and then determine whether we are in an "open" world that is expanding indefinitely or a "closed" universe, fated to eventually collapse on itself, the report published in the Astrophysical Journal said.

Previous "farthest out" galaxies were reported six years ago at a distance of about 8 billion light years.

Spinrad said improved equipment is becoming available to enable scientists to see objects another two or three billion light years away. Spinrad said that not too far in the future they may be able to measure light from galaxies 16 billion light years away.

Such light would have been created when the universe was only two billion years old and thus might unravel once and for all the puzzle of how it began.

The discovery of the distant galaxies was made through use of a special scanner at the university's Lick Observatory. The scanner captures and stores minute quantities of light from a distant point in the sky night after night until there is enough to be measured.

The light from the distant galaxies is so faint that it "is only about two percent as bright as the normal background glow of the sky," the report said.

To get a recording of one of the newly-discovered galaxies, Spinrad said he had to make 23 separate observations for a total of 10 hours spread over a three-year period.

The size of the distant galaxy was measured by both radio and optical readings in which astronomers in various parts of the world cooperated with the Berkeley scientists.

It was through mysterious signals from distant points in the universe that astronomers guessed there might be galaxies out there. The new findings show that the signals were indeed coming from galaxies, but the radio waves is still unknown.

Spinrad said it appears "the most distant galaxies are much larger than our Milky Way Galaxy." He said it would "require a thousand billion stars like our sun" to give the light they presently gave off.

The light observed and measured by the scientists had been traveling through space at the speed of six trillion miles per hour for about 10 billion years.

Carol Burnett goes to court against National Enquirer

United Press International
HOLLYWOOD — Carol Burnett tackles the National Enquirer, the country's most widely circulated newspaper, this week in a $5 million libel suit that all of Hollywood is watching.

The comedienne claims an item printed in the Enquirer 5 years ago — and retracted a month later — presented her as being drunk and disorderly at a Washington, D.C., restaurant, arguing with Henry Kissinger and spilling wine on a diner.

Burnett denies there is any truth to the item except that she was in a restaurant and did meet Kissinger.

Other personalities have criticized what they call the supermarket tabloid's cheap shots, the so-called "inside story" of their romantic flings, divorces and personal problems. But she is the first celebrity to go to trial with her gripes. Burnett refused to settle out of court.

"Every time they tried to settle I said, 'No. I want to go to trial. You are the bad guys.'"

Much of the paper's 5 million circulation can be traced to its stories of marital strife, broken romances, alcoholism and drug addiction among celebrities, often attributed to "friends" or "insiders."

Burnett, champion of many stars who also are suing the Enquirer, plans to appear Friday in Los Angeles Superior Court. The trial is expected to start the following week and will probably last for about two weeks, court sources said.

Burnett said the implication that she was a heavy drinker damaged her suit. She said she stayed with the case up to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

"If this sucker goes for 50 years, I'm going to be there in a motor chair facing the jury," she said.

Watching with interest will Dolly Parton, Ed McMahon, Pat Silvers, Rory Calhoun, Sherry Jones, Paul Lynde, Hedy Lamarr, Rudy Vallee and others who have accused the Enquirer of slandering them in print.

Nine other celebrities filed suit against the tabloid being a total of $62.5 million.

"This is the first time anyone has gone to court with the Enquirer," said Marty Ingels, who is his wife Shirley Jones is suing the newspaper for $10 million. "It's an important day for all of us. If we win her suit, it will open the floodgates for the entire libel label."

The Enquirer called Jones "crying drunk" and said Ingels hated his moviestar clients.

It quoted a Parton friend as describing her as "the Genghis Khan of country music," said Calhoun was dying of cancer, and that Lamarr a pathetic recluse and Lynde a drunken trouble-maker.

McMahon, accused of using going a face lift among other things, sued the new paper for $2.5 million saying the Enquirer "preys on the public's appetite for scandal and gossip."

"Carol's spent more in attorney's fees (an estimated $200,000) than she'll ever collect from the Enquirer," Ingels said. "But she encouraged us to hang in there."

William Masterson, an attorney with the New York law firm Rogers and Wells, will represent the Enquirer.

"Our defense against Miss Burnett's charge is that even if the item was incorrect, it wasn't defamatory," Masterson said. "Even if there were some inaccuracies, if it were harmful, it was retracted on April 6, 1976. The item was printed March 2, 1976."

Enquirer publisher Gene C. Pope Jr., who publishes the paper in Lantana, Fla., and has two spokesmen say they disseminate fabrications and have dismissed three or four staffers for bad news in the last decade.

Ingels charged the Enquirer contacts sources, generally people who come in brief contact with celebrities (waiters, hairdressers, doormen) and pays them cash "recall" situations or conversations that never took place.
