Vandals steal phone booths

United Press International
DENVER — Mountain Bell says vandals apparently have become bored with merely snipping telephone cords, and have taken to carting the entire booths away. Cyndi Evans, Mountain Bell spokeswoman, said about 50 pay telephones and booths had been stolen in the past six months, most of them in the northwest part of the city. She speculated the thieves were augmenting their income from coin box pilferage by selling the booths for scrap aluminum. "We don't know for sure that they're being scrapped for aluminum, but we've never gotten any of the booths back," she said Saturday. "If they're not scrapping them, we'd find them." Evans said it cost Mountain Bell about $600 to replace a booth, and $400 to install a new pay phone. She said stolen equipment and the resulting loss in revenue cost the Bell System $2.6 million nationwide last year. In addition to the economic impact, Evans said phone company officials were worried that the theft of a pay telephone could jeopardize someone needing a phone in an emergency. "When a public phone gets swiped, it takes away the emergency service," she said. "Someone could be bleeding and in need of help and they can't use the phone. That concerns us, too."

STRETCHING THE LIMITS

Revolutionary breakthroughs in technology are rare. Most of today's technology is the result of evolution, the application of human ingenuity to the solution of practical problems. At Fluor we apply engineering skills to achieve evolutionary improvements in the energy industry. We have contributed a number of "firsts" to modern process technology.

Our work in the design of refineries, gas processing plants, shale oil facilities and tar sands projects offers a challenging future as we strive for further breakthroughs.

If you are graduating with a degree in Mechanical, Chemical, Civil or Electrical Engineering, we can offer you the resources and support to become an energy engineer. Our in-house MBA and training programs supplement your engineering knowledge. Our training helps bridge the gap between school and industry so you can handle the diverse challenges of domestic and international process technology. The rest is up to you. If you would like to know more about career opportunities at Fluor, please send your resume to: Karen Sievers, Fluor Engineers & Constructors, Inc., Houston Division, 4620 N. Braeswood, Houston, Texas 77096.

We will be interviewing on campus March 11 for Mechanical, Electrical, Civil and Chemical Computer Science Building Construction BBA - Management/Marketing disciplines.
