House to hear idea to pay debts with surplus funds

United Press International AUSTIN — A House commit-tee has scheduled its first hearing this week on Speaker Bill Clayton's proposed constitutional amendment to use surplus funds left in the state treasury at the end of each budget period for paying off state debts and meeting future water needs. Clayton's proposal to use a por-tion of the budget surplus to estab-lish a water trust fund has the support of Gov. Bill Clements, who considers it a form of tax relief. But the plan may run afoul of another problem — legislators may have committed themselves to other spending plans that would wipe out the anticipated budget surplus this year and push Texas toward its first statewide tax in-

Clayton and Clements last eek both revived talk of a possible increase in gasoline taxes rather than allowing the highway fund to drain a projected $900 million more than expected from the general revenue fund during the next two years.

The House Constitutional Amendments Committee has scheduled a public hearing on Clayton's proposal at 2 p.m. Tues-day, but Rep. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, indicated earlier he will be in no rush to approve any proposed constitutional amendments.

McFarland cautioned that voters will tolerate only a limited number of amendment issues on the ballot at one time, and said he plans to hold the proposals in comto them by the time the Rat Olymmine how many of the proposals, and which ones, voters might approve.

Clayton's proposal is not the only controversial measure due for consideration during the week.

The House Health Services Committee opens hearings at 9:30 a.m. Monday on a bill by Rep. Gene Green, D-Houston, authorizing the manufacture, distribution, sale, prescription and use of dimethyl sulfoxide — DMSO. DMSO cannot now be legally sold as medicine in Texas, but is being sold in by roadside vendors in such cities as Dallas and often is used as a treatment for arthritis and other ailments of joints and muscles. The chemical can be sold legally only as an industrial sol-

Settlement to lift crops in civil case

United Press International DALLAS — A week-old Texas embargo of unfumigated Califor-nia produce was lifted Friday with settlement of a civil suit brought by California growers against the ban that protected Texas crops from the Mediterranean fruit fly.

After an all-day federal court hearing before U.S. District Judge Patrick Higginbotham who last Saturday refused to stop the state of Texas from implementing the embargo — the California Avocado Commission and the Texas Department of Agriculture announced the settlement.

The settlement required lifting of the embargo, which California owers had said could cost them $100 million in sales, and several public hearings around Texas for the U.S. Department of Agriculture to explain its program to com-bat the fruit fly in California. Texas imports $100 million worth of California fruits and vegetables annually.
