Some legal parking ticketed

By SHARON D. RENFROW
Battalion Reporter

Many students park in no-parking zones and hope to escape punishment but aren't surprised when they get a ticket. However, students should be surprised by getting a ticket while parked in a legal parking zone.

On March 10, Dale Crenwelge, a senior at Texas A&M University, and several other students received such a surprise.

Crenwelge's car was parked in Parking Annex 50, across from the Zachry Engineering Center, where it was ticketed. The area along the side of the lot from the entrance to about halfway into the lot is a no-parking zone. The area behind the half-way point is a legal parking zone with marked spaces.

Crenwelge's car was parked in one of these spaces. "During my four years here I have parked in that area many times," Crenwelge said. "I was shocked when I got a ticket."

Both University Police Assistant Chief Morris Maddox and Cleo Northcutt, the issuing officer, refused to dismiss the ticket.

However, after complaints from other students ticketed in the same area, Chief John R. McDonald realized that a mistake had been made.

Northcutt, a new member of the University Police, misunderstood his instructions, McDonald said. He was told to ticket the no-parking area, then issued tickets for the legally parked cars as well, he said.

Crenwelge was the first student to come in, and Maddox, unaware of the mistake, took Northcutt's word, McDonald said.

"We are now dismissing all the tickets on that day by Northcutt for that area," he said. Northcutt, who has been on the force since September, denied issuing tickets on the legally parked cars. "I just followed their instructions," he said. "I was told to ticket the cars in the no-parking zone, and that's what I did. "If they want to dismiss my tickets, that's their right."

SONG

(Tune: Yesterday)

1. Having things — having what is to have of things: Clothes 'n cars 'n houses, food and flings; They pass away, they're fading things.
2. Doing things — for a day or two and then you're through; Rack your brain for something else to do. It's all been done — there's nothing new. Like a Merry-Go-Round, when you're through, it's not so real. When the ride is over, you find you're empty still, so you seek...
3. Something real — something that will last and satisfy, Something solid that you can't deny, The answer to your hungry cry. There is something more than you've ever had before All that men dare hope for and more can now be found in someone...
4. Satisfied — Jesus Christ, you are so real to me. You have ended all my vanity. You fill the void that's deep in me. Lord Jesus, you're Reality.

Come and Enjoy

Tech review board questions research

LUBBOCK — A review board at Texas Tech University has accused the university's medical school of conducting involuntary psychological research on students and asked that the practice be stopped, the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal reported Tuesday in a copyright story.

Medical school administrator contend, however, that student participation in the project was "totally voluntary."

The newspaper said officials of the Texas Tech Health Science Center Institutional Review Board For the Protection of Human Subjects complained of the practice in a letter to Dr. Charles McCarthy, director of the Office for Protection from Research Risks at the National Institute of Health.

The letter noted that in 1977 the review board approved a research project involving "psychological testing and counseling of medical students under circumstances where the students, as subjects, could be identified by name."

But in the summer of 1980, the letter said, the project director told the review board he had "modified the consent form previously approved by the board by, among other things, removing language advising subjects that their participation in the study was voluntary."

The information, which Medical School Dean Dr. George Tyner said was voluntary, was gathered during the first week of school and includes the Cornell Critical Thinking Test, anxiety levels testing results and other test findings. The dean said the information could be "a contribution to medical education because no medical school keeps these kinds of data."

The medical school dean, along with Texas Tech President Lauro Cavazos and university attorney Marilyn Phelan, have concurred that the review board has no jurisdiction over the matter.

The review board and its chairman, Dr. Mysie J. Hughes, contend the board does have jurisdiction as stated in the appeal to the Office for Protection from Research Risks.

Office director McCarthy is expected to rule whether the regulation on protection of human subjects has been violated or whether the medical school can claim exemption from regulations if such student information is part of the enrollment process.
