Rodeoing requires money, talent

By Laura Hatch
Battalion Reporter
For many urban cowboys, the rodeo is a once-a-year event—a chance to dust off the hats and boots and take pride in being a Texan. But for members of the Texas A&M Rodeo Club, it takes a lot of money, brains and skill to live the life of a cowboy. As one member put it, "You either win or quit or have a rich dad." Many colleges help pay for students, through scholarships, to represent their school in collegiate events, club member Don Connell said. But this University doesn't. "Texas A&M has been ranked in the top for years," he said, "but we get no support from the school." To help out with the costs, some students are lucky enough to get scholarships from the N.I.R.A. sponsors like the Miller Brewing Company or U.S. Tobacco. Gil Stoner, club member and competitor in the team roping event, has been on scholarship for two years now and went to the national finals in 1979. To compete in intercollegiate rodeos, cowboys must maintain a 2.0 grade point average and be passing at least 12 hours. So it takes a lot of money and good grades to rodeo. What else?

Some events, such as team roping or women's barrel racing require of skill. Other events take more courage than anything else. Riding a mechanical bull only gives a person an idea of what it's like to ride a real one. "They're good to practice on," Connell said, "but they can be predicted and they're not going to come after you once you're been thrown." Riding the real bulls is a different story. Various hand grips help the cowboy stay on. Some, for example, use a grip leaving a bubble in the strap, Hackman said, so when the bull expands the strap won't cut the circulation off. Others, like club member David Pronger, prefer a tight grip all the way around. No matter what grip a person uses, Pronger said, "if you want out of it bad enough, you can get out." Once the cowboy has been thrown, his troubles may just be beginning. "I'm not sure if they (the bulls) want to get you or if they're just scared," Pronger said. No matter what the reason is, the rodeo clowns can be a cowboy's best friend. Pronger has been riding bulls for about eight years, he said. "I started riding steers when I was 10 or 11 and then I changed to bulls once I got into high school. "I'm not real sure what makes me do it," he said. "Most bull riders are thrill seekers, I guess."

weekend, costing the club about $3500, will have about 300 participants. Preliminary competition starts Friday. The rodeo starts Friday and Saturday at 7:30 and finals are Sunday at 1 p.m. in the Equestrian Center arena at Turkey Creek Road and FM 2818.

Oilers meet Aggie stars on basketball court

By Jane G. Brust
Battalion Staff
Several members of the Houston Oilers football team will be in College Station Tuesday night. But they won't be appearing on Kyle Field — they won't even be playing football. Instead of facing competition like the Dallas Cowboys or the Pittsburgh Steelers, the Oilers will meet the Aggeland All-Stars in a basketball game sponsored by the first-year class of the Texas A&M University College of Veterinary Medicine. The game will begin at 7:30 p.m. in G. Rolie White Coliseum.

Coaches David Goff, Barry Davis and Randy Knowles and several vet school students. Also on the Aggeland roster are: Bill Creeden, headmaster of Allen Academy, and Larry Brown and James McManus, head basketball coaches of Bryan High School and A&M Consolidated High School, respectively.

Jim Hudson, a first-year vet student, said the project will help the class pay for the vet school's annual barbeque. Each fall the second-year class hosts a barbeque to welcome the first-year students. Tickets are available in the Rudder Box Office.
