Parimutual would invite prostitution, leaders say

United Press International
AUSTIN — Church and law enforcement leaders warned Monday legalizing parimutual gambling on horse racing in Texas would be an invitation to criminal activities such as prostitution and loan sharking and could result in increased alcoholism, bankruptcy and mental illness among Texans who bet on the races.
"Gambling is not the only issue," said the Rev. Richard Freeman, representing the United Methodist Churches of Texas. "Human suffering caused by gambling also is the issue."
Freeman said he has been testifying since 1964 against proposals to legalize parimutual betting on horse races in Texas, and told the House State Affairs Committee, "The facts have never changed. The poor suffer, the poor suffer the most."
He said evidence collected in other states shows payments on loans and credit purchases decline during the racing season, and said gambling has been linked to divorce, alcoholism, bankruptcy and mental illness.
"Those things are good emotional arguments, but they have no basis in fact," responded Rep. Craig Washington, D-Houston, sponsor of the bill. Glenn McLaughlin, a retired Department of Public Safety officer and now secretary of the Texas Police Association, said, "This is an industry in which the problems greatly exceed any benefits that will be derived from it."
Both the House and Senate conducted public hearings on the parimutual betting bills Monday. Washington said the bill could produce a minimum of $35 million annually in additional tax revenue for the state.
The bill, which would allow Texas cities and counties to legalize parimutual betting on a local option basis, would give the state 5 percent of each wager at a parimutual track.
"This bill will not solve all the revenue problems we have in this state, neither will it create the problems we have heard about such as prostitution," he said.
The sheriff of Orange County, Cal., testified in support of the bill and told lawmakers his department has more problems attempting to keep criminal elements out of Bingo games than they have with horse race betting.
Sheriff Brad Gates said the biggest problem during the past 20 years in his county has been traffic congestion at the race tracks.

Former hostages get quiet jobs, want to shed label

United Press International
WASHINGTON — Kevin Hermening is recruiting Marines and looking forward to going to college.
Moorhead Kennedy is writing a book and considering running for public office.
And Michael J. Metrinko is getting reacquainted with his hometown of Olyphant, Pa., while trying to answer stacks of mail.
Hermening, Kennedy and Metrinko were among the 52 Americans freed from Iran on Jan. 20 following 444 days of captivity. All appreciated the homecoming celebrations, the parades, the yellow ribbons. But now most would like to shed the label "former hostage" and resume their lives as free U.S. citizens.
"The situation was agony, but I have to look beyond that," said Barry Rosen of Brooklyn, who was the press attache at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran when it was seized on Nov. 4, 1980.
Rosen, 36, has a fellowship to Columbia University where he is preparing a dissertation on Iran, a topic he is studying "without bitterness." He also is writing a book and plans a speaking tour.
The State Department is helping the one-time hostages move on, placing them in new assignments with high priority given to choice locations.
"The view here is they should be left alone to live their own lives," said department executive Sheldon J. Kryns. "They have come back to people who cared for them, their families, the people in their communities."
"Now they want to resume their normal lives. Any problems they had are taking care of themselves," he said.
Many of the former captives are still on leave or temporary assignments.

The State Department is helping the one-time hostages move on, placing them in new assignments with high priority given to choice locations.
This summer, the State Department personnel will be given permanent posts.
Many are going to college, to teach or study, but the bulk will be assigned to low-visibility diplomatic jobs in Western Europe.
"No one requested what you could consider a dangerous post," Kryns said.
The former hostages are likely to compare notes on their activities since their release during a reunion in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 14-16.
"It's still pretty rushed, but it is slowing down a bit," said Hermening, a Marine recruiter in Milwaukee, Wis. "I hope it stays that way."
Hermening, a Marine sergeant, at 19 was the youngest hostage. This fall, he plans to go to college and study architecture.
Kennedy, the economic and commercial officer in Tehran, and his wife Louisa, who was an able spokesman for the hostage families, may seek elective office in their home state of Maine.
Kennedy is working at Johns Hopkins University with his wife on a book about the crisis.
"I've been very happy and fulfilled in 20 years in the Foreign Service, but basically I consider myself a public servant," Kennedy said.
Metrinko, a State Department political officer, said he is unsure of his next assignment and has been trying to answer "10,000 pieces of mail."
"When I first got back, I thought it was overkill," he said of the public's response. "But then I started getting all these letters from people and learning what it meant to them and I decided maybe it wasn't overkill after all."
In recent weeks, United Press International contacted some of the former hostages and traced the whereabouts of others. Here are brief sketches of what many of these now free Americans are doing:
— Lt. Cmdr. Robert Englemann, of Hurst, Texas, supply officer, assigned to Puget Sound Naval Shipyard near Seattle, Wash. David Engelm said his brother has visited friends, written nothing about his captivity — and doesn't expect to.
— Marine Sgt. William A. Gallegos, 22, of Pueblo, Colo., is a recruiter in Denver.
— Kathryn L. Koob, 43, of Fairfax, Va., International Communications Agency officer, returns from a cruise this month and will lecture in her native Midwest before assignment in Washington.
— Frederick Lee Kupke, 23, of Francesville, Ind., communications section, expects another embassy assignment.
— Bruce Laingen, 58, of Bethesda, Md., was the embassy charge d'affaires, the highest ranking diplomat on the scene. He has been on temporary duty at the State Department and could be appointed an ambassador.
— Marine Sgt. James M. Lopez, 22, of Globe City, Ariz., requested embassy guard duty at Helsinki, Finland.
— Marine Sgt. Johnny McKee Jr., 27, will be stationed at a Navy
