SMU upset over ruling

United Press International
DALLAS — Less than a month ago Bob Hitch accepted the position of athletic director at Southern Methodist University knowing full well that his new school was about to be slapped with a severe NCAA probation.

"Yes," Hitch said Wednesday. "I knew what was going to happen. But things aren't going to be that bad. We have already recruited our freshman (football) class this year. Next year's class won't be affected."

"We can't be on ABC-TV next year, but we can be on cable television. And this will give us a chance to get our house in order. We will come out of this better in the long run."

SMU football coach Ron Meyer, however, had a hard time looking on the bright side.

"This is a dark hour for us," said Meyer. "We are ashamed of it."

The NCAA, following a lengthy investigation, cited SMU for 29 football recruiting violations Wednesday and imposed a two-year probationary period. Sanctions applied during the first year of the probation will keep SMU off games televised by ABC-TV and will prevent the Mustangs from taking part in a bowl game.

SMU will be among the preseason favorites to win the Southwest Conference this season.

Many of the allegations are considered relatively mild by NCAA standards. Most dealt with providing excess transportation to athletes while on recruiting trips to Dallas or the providing of meals by boosters or assistant coaches.

But because SMU has been in the NCAA doghouse so often — this is the fifth probation for the school — officials felt the sanction was necessary.

"Although the committee recognizes that the current president, director of athletics and head football coach were not associated with the institution at the time previous cases were considered, the committee is required under the enforcement procedures to take into account past violations," said Charles Alan Wright, chairman of the NCAA Committee on Infractions.

Included in the charges were allegations that Meyer himself, on four occasions, "led the prospect reasonably to understand that he would be able to sell his complimentary season football tickets for an amount substantially in excess of their face value."

Meyer and SMU president Dr. L. Donald Shields said such charges were false.

"The university respectfully disagrees with the committee's conclusions which relate to our head football coach," said Shields.

SMU, however, will forbid an unnamed assistant coach from recruiting during the two-year probation and will also disassociate itself with two so-called "athletic interests," who were responsible for some of the allegations.

SMU figures to lose about $160,000 because of the sanctions — money that would come to the school as a result of other Southwest Conference members appearing on television or in bowl games. But SMU will not have to surrender all of the money that would ordinarily come to it from its fellow conference-members TV appearances. By conference bylaws, the Mustangs will have to forfeit only 25 percent of the money.

"We're upset, we're shaken, but we're certainly not destroyed," said Meyer, 40, who will be in his sixth season as SMU's head coach. "My concern is for the football team, particularly our seniors who had hopes of going to a bowl game this year. I've talked to our seniors. They are hurt and they are taken aback."

"But in every case they showed set-jawed determination that we will carry on and have a good season."

United Press International
NEW YORK — Unless baseball's two factions can reach agreement on a new compensation issue over the bargaining table today, there will be a strike by the players after tonight's games.

A U.S. district court judge, ruling that there was "no cause to believe that an unfair labor practice has been committed," Wednesday denied the National Labor Relations Board's request for an injunction against the clubowners that would have set aside for a year the issue of free-agent compensation.

The NLRB, acting on the players' charges of unfair labor practices, had sought the injunction in an effort to delay the owners' implementation of their compensation proposal and the strike deadline. The delay would have allowed time for an administrative law judge to hear the complaint while the baseball season continued uninterrupted. The complaint is to be heard next Monday.

However, barring a higher court's stay of Werker's decision or a last-minute settlement at today's negotiating session, the players plan to walk out before Friday's games.

Under an earlier agreement between the two sides in the 18-month-old labor dispute, the Players Association cannot strike for 24 hours after Judge Henry F. Werker's ruling. But if they were to strike, they would have to do so no later than 48 hours after the judge's decision.

Federal mediator Ken Moffett asked representatives of players and owners to resume negotiations today at 10 a.m. EDT in a last effort to reach a settlement that would forestall a walkout by the players.

About the same time, a decision is expected by William Lubbers, general counsel of the NLRB, as to whether to appeal Judge Werker's decision to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. Lubbers said that he would also decide whether to seek a stay of Judge Werker's ruling pending resolution of the possible appeal.

If a strike occurs, Donald Fehr, the players' general counsel, believes it could be a long one.

"Given the postures of the parties, the seeds of a very long confrontation are in the air," Fehr said.

Ray Grebey, the owners' chief negotiator, praised Werker's ruling and called for further negotiations to settle the compensation issue.

"It was major-league baseball's position from the start that the action of the Players Association alleging an unfair labor practice and a seeking of an injunction by the NLRB was a diversion from the collective bargaining where the issue must be settled," Grebey said.

"A controversy over compensation for free agents in the reentry draft must be settled by good faith efforts in collective bargaining."
