Two indicted for gun smuggling

United Press International
HOUSTON — Two British gun dealers have been indicted on charges they tried to smuggle $1.2 million worth of combat weapons to South Africa, a plan U.S. Customs officials contend was blocked by undercover agents who aided in one of the largest weapons seizures in history.

The two men and the crew of a chartered Boeing 707 jetliner were arrested May 12 by customs officials who seized the plane and the cache of weapons at Houston Intercontinental Airport. Government officials said they believed the weapons seizure ranked among the largest ever.

A federal grand jury Tuesday indicted Peter Thomas Towers, 51, and John Parks, 43, of London on one count of conspiracy to smuggle, one count of trying to export without a license and 22 counts of possessing unregistered guns.

However, the panel declined to indict the pilot of the chartered jetliner that agents say was to deliver the load. A U.S. magistrate then dismissed the charges against pilot George Bellamy, 57.

Charges had been dropped earlier against three crewmen aboard the airliner, which was owned by the charter carrier Montana Austria Airlines. Customs officials are still holding the plane.

Of being cleared, Bellamy said: "It's only right. I wasn't doing anything wrong as far as I was concerned, had no intention of doing anything wrong. I was trying to do a job for my company."

"Mr. Bellamy's position all the way through this is that he was a pilot of an airline," lawyer Robert Sussman said.

"The government still has our 707 belonging to Montana Austria Airlines. It will be our position that they should not have seized that plane, they have no business holding that plane and we own our plane back."

Towers, Parks, Bellamy and flight crewmen were arrested at private Houston Intercontinental Airport terminal where 80 automatic rifles, 135 grenades, 100 shotguns and other weapons were being loaded into the jetliner.

Customs officials said they posed as middlemen supplying the weapons, having driven to Houston from a gun factory in Connecticut.

Towers and Parks were freed under $110,000 cash bond, Bellamy, who had been held in bond, was released.

Researcher says strict religion lowers IQ scores

United Press International
HOUSTON — Educators and a Catholic bishop expressed surprise and disagreement with a University of Houston researcher who said her study shows IQ scores are lower among children of mothers with strict religious backgrounds.

Dr. Zena Blau said in her 220-page study "Black Children, White Children: Competence, Socialization and Social Structure" the impact of strict religious institutions "is adversive to a child's intellectual development."

Blau said IQ testing of more than 1,000 school-age children showed the children of Baptist and Catholic mothers scored lower than the children of non-religious or non-denominational mothers.

But educators at two Southern Baptist Convention universities said Tuesday the findings are hard to believe.

Dr. Jess Fletcher, president of the SBC's Hardin-Simmons University, said Blau's report would not stand up under questioning.

"I head a university with many Baptist students and I have seen no evidence of what this study shows. She (Blau) has opened up a very provocative issue," he said.

Dr. Russell Lester, religion professor at Baylor University, said, "I hardly see how there could be some correlation (between religion and intellect)."

Auxiliary Bishop John E. McCarthy of the Catholic Diocese of Galveston-Houston said he had not yet seen Blau's report but it sounded "absurd."

"My first reaction would be to consider it another well-intentioned effort from the sociology to come to grips with complex issues," McCarthy said.

Blau said Tuesday religion is one variable in a child's intellectual development, and her study shows Baptist and Catholic mothers put less emphasis on higher education.

"When you've got less education, you value education less," she said.

Court rules in favor of mother in child-snatching case

United Press International
AUSTIN — The Texas Supreme Court ruled on a child snatching case today, saying the father had in effect kidnapped the child and that the lower court erred in not granting an order returning the child to her mother.

Bonita and William Pacheco were divorced in 1975 and the 18th district court of Johnson County gave custody of the child, Carolynda, to the mother. Following the divorce, Mrs. Pacheco remarried and moved to Nebraska and later to Dickson, Tenn.

According to court records, Pacheco drove to Dickson on Feb. 22, 1981, and without Bonita's consent her new husband allowed Pacheco to take the child and return to Cleburne, Texas.

Pacheco then went to court in hopes of modifying the custody ruling and was granted a restraining order barring Bonita from any interference in his possession of the child.

According to the opinion, Bonita went to Cleburne with Carolynda and tried to regain possession of the child. A fight between Bonita and Pacheco's new wife broke out and all of the parties were arrested.

Bonita filed a proceeding asking that Pacheco had the child illegally and that the child should be returned to her because she was given possession in the divorce decree.

The trial court denied her request, but the Supreme Court overturned that ruling saying the Legislature had sought to prevent kidnapping such as happened in Tennessee and the child snatching "such as happened in Cleburne."

The court said the district court judge erred in issuing the restraining order against Bonita, even though Pacheco was seeking to change the initial custody ruling.

In a separate concurring opinion, Justice C.L. Ray said he agreed with the majority opinion but would further discuss "self-help" in custody fights allowing compensatory and punitive damages for the wrongful abduction of a child.
