Board approves construction

The Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System Wednesday gave its approval to Texas A&M University's plans for more than $24 million in construction.

Meeting in Austin to consider a regular agenda of items, the board authorized the University to proceed with six separate construction projects including $14.2 million for a new horticulture and forest science laboratory building.

All of the proposed projects had been previously approved by the Texas A&M System Board of Regents.

"We are pleased to be given the go-ahead for these proposals," said Dr. J.M. Prescott, vice president for academic affairs. "Texas A&M is still growing and these new buildings as well as those already under construction, are crucial to providing the laboratory and classroom facilities to meet that continued growth."

Other projects approved in the board action were $1.9 million for an animal science pavilion; $2.75 million for the conversion of the existing animal science pavilion into offices, meeting rooms and a registration center; $3.3 million for expansion of the Cyclotron Institute; $234,000 for construction of an astronomy observatory; and $2 million for a Texas A&M University Press building.

Dennis Ivey sponsors benefit dance for KAMU

Dennis Ivey and the Waymen, a local country and western band, have come to the aid of public broadcasting in the Brazos Valley by sponsoring a benefit dance for KAMU-FM.

The benefit begins at 8 p.m. tonight at the Lakeview Club and lasts until midnight. Admission is $3 per person and all proceeds go to KAMU.

Although KAMU-FM is primarily a classical music and jazz radio station, it has carried many hours of folk and bluegrass programs as well. Later this summer, the country and western group will appear on a special televised concert on KAMU-TV as part of the first night of the public television station's August Festival.

The benefit is coordinated through the Friends of KAMU, a group of station supporters who also work during the KAMU auction and festivals.

Both of the KAMU stations are licensed to Texas A&M University.
