Springs out front in battle for Poke fullback position

United Press International THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. -

Dallas Cowboys officials said Tuesday fullback Ron Springs is blocking with "enthusiasm" during training camp. With Robert Newhouse and Timmy Newsome still sidelined by leg injuries, Springs quickly has become a frontrunner in the three-way battle for the starting fullback position alongside halfback Tony Dorsett.

"Springs definitely looks quick-er," said Al Lavan, coach of the running backs. "I think that's mainly because he has a year of experience behind him at fullback and he knows the position much better.

After a fine rookie season as Dorsett's backup in 1979, Springs was moved to fullback last year. The fifth-round draft choice from Ohio State opened the season as starting fullback, then twisted an ankle three weeks into the season and was unable to regain the job from the veteran Newhouse.

Coach Tom Landry had said the fullback position would be open this year going into traning camp and he hoped someone would emerge as a clearcut starter. Landry said the main thing he was seeking from Springs was im-provement in his blocking.

"Like we do with all our play-
