The piano in the MSC main lounge lets these two musicians from Waco entertain passersby with selections from Chopin. Chia Ying Wang, 14, has studied piano seven years, and Chia Ming Wang, 11, has studied three years. Their father, Dr. Ken Hsi Wang is visiting the Texas A&M campus to do research in physics.

Judges accused in abuse of visitation privileges

United Press International
DALLAS — Some state judges, taking advantage of a loophole in the "visiting judge" program, have been abusing the system to make handsome personal gains without fear of official sanction, says a spokesman for the state's Commission on Judicial Conduct.
The judges leave their courtroom and travel great distances on the pretext of helping a judge who is ill, burdened by a heavy case load, or cannot hear a case because of conflict of interest, said Maurice Pipkin, executive director of the commission.
The judges charge their hotel bills and travel expenses to the counties they visit and collect an extra $25 per day for their work, Pipkin said.
"They're playing musical chairs," he said. "Judge X will go to Judge Y's court who will go to someone else's court and the first thing you know there's a chain of visiting judges."

According to figures for last year, the judges took 1,737 trips and collected $160,425 as extra pay. The counties they visited picked up their hotel and travel bills.
"There are abuses. There's just no question," Pipkin said.
Pipkin said the program was primarily designed to enable a judge to get help when his court docket got overloaded and to get the most benefit from the state's limited number of judges. The program requires a busy judge to invite only the nearest available colleague but in practice the judges have been circumventing the system to travel great distances to make money.

"Some of them live pretty high off the hog," Pipkin said. "There's no restriction on what they spend. They just present the bills and the county picks up the tab."
He said, "It is something that's been bothering us for years because it is such a loose arrangement."
Chief Justice Joe Greenhill of the State Supreme Court says he has no knowledge of any abuse but agreed with Pipkin about the lack of supervision and the need for a centralized court administration.
"Legislation is needed to change this to give me and the presiding judge (of each judicial district) more power," Greenhill said.

Texas Briefs

Citizen protests

United Press International
HAMBY — Angered that they will take protest Gov. Bill Clements and the congressional delegation to stall placement of more parolees in an area halfway house.
"There's a gun in every room and there's not one of us hasn't thought about what we should do," Mr. B. Smith, who lives next door to the halfway house, said Sunday. He said citizens in the area would try to protest to the governor and Texas congressmen. Eight less already are housed in Hamby halfway house, but facility has been approved eventually handle a maximum of 53. Statewide, an estimated 1,000 parolees have already been leased to halfway houses in an effort to ease overcrowding in prisons.

Collins to run

United Press International
DALLAS — Rep. Jim Collins, R-Texas, has filed a declaration of candidacy for the U.S. Senate seat currently held by Democrat Bentsen, but said the race would be regarded as an announcement of his intentions.
Collins, the first major Republican candidate to file for Bentsen's seat, filed an official statement Wednesday with the Senate committee. The statement makes him a Senate candidate. Collins said he would not make his decision until late August but would not make a formal announcement until a week before the filing deadline next month.

Slayings

United Press International
DALLAS — A 14-year-old boy accused in the slayings of two girls, ARCO Oil and Gas President William Keeler's wife, will remain at the County detention center for more days while undergoing psychiatric examination, the county said.
Doug Mulder said he waived a second scheduled hearing Friday so the boy could remain at the detention center. State law requires hearings every 10 days to determine whether a juvenile accused of a crime should remain in custody or be released to a relative or guardian. The boy has been held at the detention center since the July 12 slayings of his parents at home.
