Propeller could belong to Titanic

ABILENE — Millionaire oilman Jack Grimm said Tuesday that color photographs taken of the North Atlantic ocean floor this summer "definitely show a propeller of the Titanic."

Grimm said he believes the propeller is still attached to the wreckage of the White Star Liner, which struck an iceberg and sank April 14, 1912, killing more than 1,500 people.

The pictures indicate the propeller is approximately 16 feet in diameter—the same size of the Titanic's propellers, he said.

"I'm certain we located the Titanic. The propeller blades are suspended well above the ocean floor and that means to me and my associates that the propeller is still attached to the shaft.

The blades are definitely not rusting on the ocean bottom and it's obvious they have to be suspended from something."

Grimm emphasized that his team of experts agrees with him in his conclusion that the blades are part of the propeller.

"Two blades in particular are visible," he said. "They are sticking up (off the ocean bottom) and are quite easily identifiable."

The color photos, taken at a depth of more than 12,000 feet with exotic new deep-sea photo equipment, have been studied since the second phase of Grimm's two-year expedition concluded in July.

The pictures were taken at 15-second intervals for several days in the course of dragging operations over the area where the ship went down.

Grimm charted the Texas A&M Research Vessel Gyre this summer for his second attempt to locate the sunken luxury liner and recover the fortune in gold and jewels believed to be in the safe in the purser's cabin.

Grimm said the photo studies are now encouraging him and his associates to consider another venture next summer in the hope of actually boarding the wreckage through the use of a deep-sea submersible known as the Aluminant.

The craft carries a crew of two and has already been tested successfully at ocean depths of 15,000 feet.

"I'm more confident now than ever that we can accomplish our objective now that we have located the ship," Grimm said.

Anti-MX petition fails with Wyoming legislator

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A Wyoming group opposed to land basing of the MX missile says it could not reach an agreement with Rep. Richard Cheney on the issue.

Wyoming Against the MX representative Louis Leichtweis said Cheney, R-Wyo., met with about 10 group members Saturday in his Cheyenne office and was given a petition with 600 signatures opposed to deployment of the MX missile in Wyoming.

"Cheney strongly disagreed with the group's position that the MX should be abandoned on military as well as social and environmental grounds, saying that he would support whatever recommendation President Reagan decided upon," Leichtweis said in a news release.

Cheney did not think Wyoming would be chosen as a site for a mobile MX system because of inadequate topography and water, the release said.

Texas briefs

Tandy chairman

FORT WORTH — Carson R. Thompson has been named president and chief operating officer of Tandy Brands Inc. effective Monday. Douglas H. Manning, chairman and chief executive officer, made the announcement.

Thompson, 42, has been with Tandy Corporation and Tandy Brands since 1957. He was appointed a vice president and director of Tandy Brands in 1978, and has served as executive vice president since 1980.

Tandy Brands, a specialty retailer and manufacturer of high quality leather goods, also announced record sales and earnings for the year ended June 30.

Man sentenced

HOUSTON — The man who supplied information for prosecutors to help them successfully convict an investor for his mother's murder six years ago was sentenced to 16 years in prison Monday for his role in the slaying.

State District Judge Allen Stillely listened to two unlikely witnesses before sentencing Paul MacDonald, 36, for his role in the 1975 murder of socialite Gertrude Zabolio.

Testifying for MacDonald, who testified for the state during the trial earlier this month of Markham Duff-Smith, was detective Johnny Bonds, who was convinced of Duff-Smith's guilt for two years, and Assistant District Attorney Mac Arnold, who successfully prosecuted the case.

New scholarships

COLLEGE STATION — The widow of a Texas A&M alumnus has become the first person to contribute scholarships to each of the university's top two scholarship programs.

Hesta Mulloy, widow of 1931 graduate George D. Mulloy, unknowingly gained the distinction when she presented checks to acting president Dr. Charles H. Samson to establish an additional President's Endowed Scholarship and another Twelfth Man Scholarship.

The President's Endowed Scholarship is the most prestigious such award offered by Texas A&M University and is presented to an outstanding high school senior. Twelfth Man Scholarships go to "blue chip" and other highly sought athletes.

Manslaughter

HOUSTON — A grand jury Monday indicted a 49-year-old woman on an involuntary manslaughter charge alleging she tried to abort the fetus of a friend by allowing her to drink parquat.

Flora Mata, 28, died Aug. 17 after ingesting the deadly chemical three weeks earlier. Doctors said the parquat had burned her throat, liver and bladder.

Homicide Detective U.P. Hernandez said landlady Flor Maria Munoz gave Mata, an unmarried woman, the laced tea because she didn't want to see her get hurt because of the pregnancy. Munoz used the chemical to kill rats.

Bullet wound

DENTON — Denton County officials Monday determined the burned body of a man, found while firefighters were dousing a grass fire, had a bullet wound in the head.

The unidentified body was found late Sunday after firemen from Denton and Cooke counties fought a blaze near the county line. They believed the man was soaked with either gasoline or diesel fuel and set on fire.

Pathologist Dr. Lloyd White said the man was shot in the head at least a day before being dumped in the field and ignited. The fire burned about three acres of land.
