RHA helps students with dorm activities

By BERNIE FETTE
Battalion Staff
On-campus students looking for a way to get involved in University activities may find that way just down the hall of their own dormitory.

The Residence Hall Association, an organization which has been at Texas A&M University since 1973, helps unite civilian students living on campus but its main concern is the activities of the individual dorms, said RHA Adviser Nolen Mears.

"The biggest emphasis is placed on what the halls do," he said.

What residence halls do is determined by the hall councils. Hall council officers are elected each spring to serve the following two semesters. Other residents are elected to represent each floor, wing or ramp in their residence hall.

Council members in each hall collect an optional activity fee of approximately $7.50 per semester. These activity fees are used to fund hall activities such as mixers, formals and intramural sports. The cost of the activity fee is determined by the residents living in each hall.

RHA members report on various hall activities and offer suggestions for improving hall programming. RHA meetings also provide a way for residents in different halls to get together to plan activities involving more than one hall.

All students living in residence halls are general members of the association. Thus, they can attend RHA meetings and participate in all RHA-sponsored events.

RHA sponsors several campus-wide activities, the biggest of which is Casino.

On Casino night, the Memorial Student Center is transformed into a Las Vegas lounge complete with gambling tables and can-can girls. Casino visitors buy tickets to enjoy the show and "gamble" with play money. Casino is held each spring in conjunction with Parents' Weekend.

Another annual event sponsored by the association is Almost Anything Goes, a series of unusual games and contests usually held on the main drill field. Almost Anything Goes is fashioned after the television show of the same name.

Each spring, RHA sponsors a new presidents' retreat for all incoming hall presidents. The retreat is held out of town and is designed to acquaint the new officers with each other and to motivate them for activities in the year ahead.
