Soapmaking not all washed up

United Press International
NEW YORK — The almost forgotten art of soapmaking is being revived across the country, according to a survey by the makers of Lewis' Red Devil Lye. The study showed 62 percent of purchases of the lye product were made for the purpose of home or cottage-industry soapmaking.

"Homemakers tell us they are producing enough laundry soap for 60 washloads at a cost under $1," said spokeswoman Linda Dodge.

She said "some women are making and selling interesting looking and fragrant soaps to raise money for church groups or local charities."

Hughes kin claimants scoff at sterile claims

United Press International
HOUSTON — An attorney for five parties claiming close kinship to Howard Hughes scoffed at testimony intended to show the five are not relatives of the late millionaire.

Ruth Dietrich, a staff genealogist in the Sons of the American Revolution Headquarters in Louisville, Ky., said Rupert Hughes, an uncle of the famous recluse, failed to list any children on his 1917 application to the historical society.

"Most people would be proud to list their sons and daughters on the application," Dietrich testified during cross-examination. In opening arguments Tuesday, Lawyer George Parnham said Hughes' uncle Rupert was left sterile by a childhood disease.

Probate Judge Pat Gregory and the six member jury will decide how the paternal portion of the estate will be divided.

Parnham's co-counsel, Jacqueline Taylor, told reporters, "The fact that there is an omission on the application is an admission that Rupert had no children."

Their clients are 80 second cousins representing about 400 claims. For the cousins to inherit the paternal portion of the Hughes estate, Parnham must prove Rupert Hughes had no children. The estate is valued between $163 million and $1.2 billion.

If attorneys for five parties claiming closer kinship can prove Rupert Hughes did father Elspeth Hughes Lapp, then Lapp's three daughters, her step-sister and her step-brother's estate will inherit.

Lawyer Wayne Fisher, who represents the five, made light of Dietrich's testimony.

"He didn't say (on the application) he didn't have any children," Fisher said. "He just left it blank. If that's the strength of their case, bring on more of it."

Fisher represents Lapp's daughters — Barbara Lapp Cameron, Elspeth Lapp DePoull and Agnes Lapp Roberts, her step-sister and step-brother's estate.

Parnham said his team planned to "use family statements and documents through their witnesses who claim relation to Howard Hughes."

Parnham also seeks to prove Rupert Hughes' sterility.

"The family history is so strongly coupled with the information about the Sons of the American Revolution," Parnham said. "The jury will find our clients next to inherit."

Earlier, Fisher exposed inconsistencies in the testimony of Robert Hughes, of Wetumpka, Ala., who said Lapp was a poster supported by a family spiracy.

Hughes cited oral family history and long-lost documents found in an uncle's trunk 40 years ago and claimed the Elspeth mothered the three daughters, the child of Rupert's second, secretly substituted as the daughter.

He testified Rupert's daughter was a Lelia Hughes who drowned in 1914 editions of "Meadow" that had described a woman who was the one described by Robert Hughes.

Robert Hughes said he thought the woman was Lelia Blake Hughes, but could not explain how she was Babcock Hughes could have same plays.

At the noon recess, Fisher reporters, "When you start this kind of story, the home come home to root. The time."
