Tower disputes charges of applying pressure

United Press International DALLAS — Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, is denying a newspaper report that he pressured the Reagan administration into nominating his wife to preside over an agency and into saving the agency from budget extinction.

Lilla Tower, an attorney, was nominated to head the Institute of Museum Services, which processes grant applications. The job pays $50,000 annually.

The Dallas Morning News reported Wednesday the museum service agency had been tentatively listed in April on Budget Director David Stockman's hit list but was retained following a call from Tower to presidential assistant Lyn Nofziger.

The newspaper quoted a Washington source who said the chairman of the powerful Senate Armed Services Committee had telephoned Nofziger to suggest Mrs. Tower be nominated to head the agency. She was nominated in June.

"I have done nothing whatsoever to intervene in the administration's plans to abolish (the institution), nor did I attempt to bring any pressure to bear on the administration selection process," Tower said Wednesday.

"My wife has been chosen President Reagan for this position on the basis of her own merits," Tower said Congress had yet approved an appropriation for the institute and would not act until later this year. He said members of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources recommended partial funding of the agency.

"This action was taken in February, long before Mrs. Tower was mentioned for this position," Tower said.

He said the administration favored dissolving the agency. "Mrs. Tower fully expects to provide over its phasing out if confirmed as director," he said.

White House officials say Tower's nomination "will be sent to the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee for confirmation hearings."

Stockman had listed the agency for elimination in his initial budget cutback proposal.

But the agency was saved when the White House agreed to a reduction in its own budget, from $12.9 million to $9.6 million, the Morning News said.
