Texan wounded in Egypt shooting

United Press International
ARLAND — The family of a military observer wounded during the assassination of Egyptian president Anwar Sadat was unshaken by the news, but reversed the wound was not critical. Air Force Lt. Col. Charles Loney, 42, received a flesh wound in the shoulder during the machine-gun and hand grenade attack on the parade reviewing stand where the president was yesterday.

"All we've learned is what the news media already knows — that my big brother's wound was not as serious. We're mighty relieved to hear that much," said a sister, Loney's sister. She said her mother, Ann Jones, also of the Dallas suburb of Garland, was placed under sedation and the family had been shocked at the news.

"Most of our information is coming from Mary, his wife," Petzold said. "She's in Washington and is getting calls directly from the Pentagon."

In addition to Loney, two other American military observers were wounded.

Air Force Capt. Christopher Ryan, 34, of Sacramento, Calif., attached to the U.S. European Command in Stuttgart, West Germany, was shot in the foot. Marine Maj. Jerald Agenbroad, 36, of Drilleau, Idaho, attached to MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., was shot in the leg.

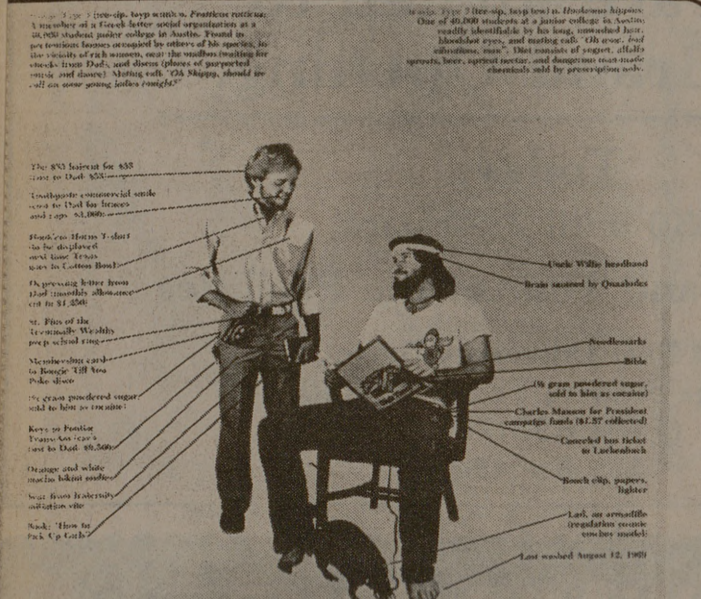

Barbecue Korean style

Hee Soo Lee demonstrates how easy it is to make delicious Korean barbecue on tonight's segment of Channel 15's "Beyond Our Borders" series. Besides the barbecue, Korean dress, music and current affairs will be discussed with Texas A&M University students from South Korea. "Beyond Our Borders" is produced by Ruth A. Bomar at KAMU with help from the International Student Association. The programs air each Wednesday at 7 p.m.

Are You a teasip?

Thousands of people were relieved a few years ago when they found, by comparing symptoms with a poster issued by National Enquirer magazine, that they were not nuts.

But now a new danger has been recognized. Without knowing it, you may be a teasip. Check yourself against the characteristics pointed out here.

Verdict held pending outcome of jury trial

United Press International
CARLSBAD, N.M. — A judge's verdict in the criminal trespass case against seven newsmen will await completion of a jury trial of 20 protesters facing identical charges for an anti-Waste Isolation Pilot Plant demonstration.

The trial of the protesters, along with a freelance journalist who also wanted a jury to hear his case, was scheduled to begin today following Tuesday's non-jury trial for the news media members. Magistrate H. H. Linneweh is the presiding judge in both cases.

Following completion of testimony Tuesday, Linneweh withheld a verdict saying to render a decision might prejudice the jury in today's trial.

The charges against the news media members stemmed from their reportage and photographic coverage of a Labor Day protest at a proposed federal nuclear repository site east of Carlsbad.

"The judge is not going to render a decision in this case until the jury trial is completed," a spokeswoman for Linneweh said. "He felt that if he did make a decision it would influence the word travels real fast," she said.

Tuesday's defendants were Miguel Gandert of KOAT, Warren Benjamin of KOB, Bob Martin and Andrew Cardona of KGGM, CBS television newsmen Patrick O'Dell of Dallas, Eduardo Diaz of National Public Radio and Bob Coleman of the Carlsbad Current-Argus.

Shortly after their arrests the 20 demonstrators asked that their trial be separated from that of the news personnel.

One protester, Craig Simpson, 35, of Albuquerque, pleaded no contest to the charges against him Sept. 8. He was sentenced to a $50 fine and two days in jail.

He served out most of the sentence in jail but eventually paid a small fine so he could return to his job at an Albuquerque preschool.

Free-lance journalist Kenneth McCormack of Albuquerque, who also requested a jury trial, was on trial today along with 20 demonstrators.
