United Press International
SAVANNAH, Ga. — The two men who made the first transcontinental crossing of the United States in a helium balloon said Monday that the trip was on time and on target thanks to the nation's air traffic control system.

"It seems like we've improved the system," said a smiling and relaxed John Shoecraft, 37, who with Fred Correll, 40, piloted the balloon from California to Georgia.

The pair landed Sunday on an offshore Georgia island. Shoecraft said that help from the air traffic controllers was critical since it was impossible for the balloonists to determine the direction of their flight.

"Even though we had a compass, we could only tell which way the gondola was facing," he said. Shoecraft also complimented an official in the National Weather Service office in Denver for helping plot wind currents.

He and Correll, both of Scottsdale, Ariz., said the landing — only a few feet from the waters of the Atlantic — on Blackbeard Island was "on target." He said they picked Georgia as a landing area and carried "only flags from California and Georgia."

Shoecraft said the landing was "right exciting." He said the gondola was designed so it could be detached if it appeared the landing site was going to be passed.

"It looked like we were going to miss the beach on coming in," he said. "Rather than do that, we decided to drop from three feet. Now, that doesn't sound like much, but when you drop a car from three feet things can bounce around pretty good."

The 10-story-high balloon passed through upper atmosphere temperatures of 40 degrees below zero on the 2,515-mile journey that began in Costa Mesa, Calif.

It took the adventurers 55 hours and 25 minutes — from Friday day to Sunday — to complete a journey in their huge balloon bed "Superchicken III."

Correll said he and Shoecraft — dressed in five layers of clothing and electric socks — jumped from the gondola and "jumpered and down" after a "very smooth landing Sunday just 200 yards from the warm ocean water. Then they planted a "Superchicken" flag in Blackbeard Island sand to mark their feat.

Three hours later, they were picked up and taken back to the mainland, where they had the first good night's sleep since Friday. "The biggest reward of the flight is finally making it — achieving a goal we set off to do," Shoecraft, who had attempted a cross-country flight twice before. "I couldn't have imagined a more successful outcome for a coast-to-coast flight to land on the beach."

Asked about their future plans and a possible future flight of "Superchicken IV," Correll said: "I don't know, but it seems kind of shame to leave it in the garage doesn't it?"

Correll said: "I think that was the thing that surprised me the most. Of course we were on oxygen all the time. You can't sleep drink or do anything else without oxygen. Have you ever tried to spread honey at 40,000 feet?"

Balloon experts say the flight which cost the pair an estimated $80,000, is the second across North America, but the first coast-to-coast flight made within U.S. borders.

Maxie Anderson and his son, Kris, of Albuquerque, N.M., are credited with the first coast-to-coast flight from San Francisco to the eastern tip of Canada in April 1980.

This was the third coast-to-coast attempt for Shoecraft, who learned ballooning from Correll. It was Correll's first transcontinental attempt.

Buy your own cell block with bunks for $2,000

United Press International
GLENROCK, Wyo. — For sale: one old jail.
"It's old-fashioned, and it's a pretty nice piece of work," said Gus Anderson of Demolition Contractors in Casper, who salvaged the jail from the old Glenrock Town Hall.
Anderson estimated the jail is at least 80 years old, since the heavy steel slats that hold the 13-by-13-foot structure together are riveted instead of welded.

"It has quite a bit of history to it," he said.

Originally the Lusk Town Jail at the turn of the century, the jail had two cells with bunks and hand-operated locks, Anderson said.

The price is $2,000, and Anderson hopes it will be sold to someone with a historical interest.
