SMU and Texas to clash in tough SWC football weekend

United Press International
The Arkansas Razorbacks managed to take a lot of the starch out of Saturday's Texas-SMU collision.

But at the same time they managed to turn this week's Southwest Conference circus into a multi-ring affair with all sorts of possibilities coming to life as far as the host spot in the Cotton Bowl is concerned.

The unbeaten SMU Mustangs, leading the conference race and having a shot at only its third perfect season ever, will still capture the spotlight in its run-in with the disappointed Longhorns.

But because SMU, what with its probation, is ineligible for the Cotton Bowl berth this year, the race for that spot could reach new heights on the confusion meter.

Arkansas, Texas A&M, Rice and Texas all go into this week's round with one conference loss while Baylor, Houston and TCU have two each.

"No team in the Southwest Conference is without talent and no league team is incapable of defeating any other league team," said Arkansas coach Lou Holtz.

"It's a rather unusual year," added Baylor coach Grant Teaff. "Anything can happen. I know it would be difficult for us to make it. Even if SMU runs off with the race and everybody else has at least two losses, the Cotton Bowl berth would probably be decided by which team has gone the longest without playing there and, of course, we played there last season."

But Baylor can't be counted out yet. In fact, only the unfortunate Texas Tech Red Raiders (who have lost all four of their conference starts) are obviously out of the picture.

This week's lineup includes: — Texas (4-1) at SMU (6-0). The Longhorns face the necessity of bouncing back from one of its more destructive losses in quite some time while SMU has suffered nothing but good fortune since the opening of the season.

"These guys have a great challenge," said Texas coach Fred Akers, whose team's national ranking slipped from first to eighth after its loss to Arkansas. "They are playing a fine team and maybe that challenge is what we need."

— Houston (3-3) vs. Arkansas (4-1) at Little Rock. Turnovers have cost the Cougars in two straight games while Arkansas must fight off the seemingly inevitable letdown following a big win.

"But I fear a letdown after the Texas game less with this team than with any team I've ever coached," said Holtz. "Sure, there is always a chance, but I don't think it will happen."

— Texas A&M (4-2) at Rice (3-3). The Owls have won three games in a row and with quarterback Michael Calhoun throwing touchdown passes at an alarming clip they have developed the same winning confidence they had a year ago. Wins by Rice, SMU and Houston this week would leave the Owls as the leader in the Cotton Bowl derby.

— TCU (2-3-1) at Baylor (4-1). Its win over Texas A&M last week was a critical one for the Bears, who now could rally and get back into the postseason picture. TCU, meanwhile, is not the same team without injured receiver Stan Washington and his status will long way in determining much of a fight the Horned Rats will have.

— Washington at Texas Tech (1-5). This is the final interconference game of the regular season in the SWC, which to date sports an 18-7-1 record against its conference foes.
