Court refuses to review Texan's conspiracy appeal

United Press International
WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court Monday refused to review the conviction of a multimillionaire Texas businessman found guilty of conspiring to help financier Billie Sol Estes hide his assets from the Internal Revenue Service.

The justices rejected an appeal by Raymond K. Horton, of Midland, who had claimed the evidence against him was insufficient to convict him of conspiracy.

In the 1960s, Estes was convicted of tax fraud and served a prison term. One of the conditions of his parole from prison was that he would not engage in any promotional activities.

Despite that provision, Estes and Horton, who made his fortune in the oil business, were found guilty of conspiracy to defraud the government by concealing assets from the IRS.

Estes was sentenced to five years and has filed a separate appeal with the high court.

Horton was sentenced to three years confinement and was fined $10,000. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans upheld his conviction.

Government prosecutors charged Horton and Estes were involved in ventures that funneled money to Estes without the knowledge of the IRS.

The government contended Estes hid the funds to prevent the IRS from obtaining part of the income to offset a multi-million tax liability he owed for his early dealings.

When Estes was released from prison in 1971, prosecutors said Horton discussed working with him and paid Estes a $700 monthly salary. In 1974-75, Horton bought a chemical cleaning manufacturing business that would clean oil field equipment.

"Horton directed that certain monies from the sale of the cleaners, which incidentally were non-existent, be given to Billie Sol Estes in $100 denominations," the appellate panel noted.

The government launched an investigation in which government agents, acting as potential investors with shady, Mafia-like connections, contacted Estes to discuss business deals and recorded their conversations.

In these tapes, Estes told the government agents that he had ownership rights in Horton's business, that he knew how to handle Horton and that he in effect controlled Horton.

"Estes also told the agents that his actual worth was very high but that the money was kept in the name of someone else since he was not allowed to have it in his own name," the appeals court added.

1881 prices exist in 1981

United Press International
CHICAGO — An elegant meal that normally costs $35 was only 85 cents at an exclusive restaurant Sunday.

Lamb chops were 15 cents, appetizers a dime and vichyssoise, chocolate mousse and a bottle of beer 5 cents each at Cricket's restaurant, which was celebrating its fifth anniversary by rolling prices back to 1881 levels.

"We had to turn down at least 500 people," said restaurant managing director John Fleming.

Mafia, owner may be linked

United Press International
DALLAS — The government is probing possible ties between a company run by a former high-ranking official of a government military sales service and members of the powerful Vito Genovese Mafia family, according to the Dallas Morning News.

Court documents filed in a perjury and conspiracy case against Victor Nitti, formerly employed by the Army-Air Force Exchange Service in Dallas, disclosed the Justice Department was seeking testimony from Venero Mangano, the newspaper reported in its Sunday editions. Mangano, an alleged bookmaker, is in federal custody in New York on unrelated charges, the newspaper said.

Nitti has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to bribe AAFES workers in order to get contracts for his company. He also pleaded guilty to lying to a Dallas federal grand jury in August 1979 when asked if he received bribes from the exchange service.

Nitti worked for the military merchandising exchange service from 1951 to 1975 and retired to set up his own military sales firm — Intercontinental Marketing Inc — which did business with his former employer, the paper reported.

Federal sources have been reluctant to give details on potential business connections between Nitti and Mangano, who operates a New York clothing store.

Nitti's attorney, Lawrence Hochheiser of New York, would neither confirm nor deny to the newspaper that his client had business dealings with organized crime figures.
