Wilson, Nielsen back together for Sunday's game

United Press International
HOUSTON — It says a lot about both teams this year that Oakland Raiders quarterback Marc Wilson, at one time the understudy to Fred Nielsen at Brigham Young University, became a starting NFL quarterback before Nielsen did.

An injury made a difference in the success formula in the case of Nielsen, 27, who probably would be starting for the Oilers when they play the Raiders Sunday if not for a shoulder muscle torn in a preseason game.

Wilson, 24, will be under center making his fourth consecutive start in place of benched early-season regular Jim Plunkett. He recalled here he learned some early lessons.

"I've always looked up to Giff (Nielsen) more than anybody else," Nielsen said. "When we were together at BYU, I respected him so much, not only as a football player but as a person. I tried to be like him."

He added, however, "Our (quarterbacking) styles are a little different because I'm a little more mobile."

Wilson gained an NFL starting berth earlier than most people might expect he would. The desperation brought on by three straight losses earlier this season pushed him to the front, and since he has started the Raiders are 2-1.

The Oilers experienced no such desperation despite inconsistency all year and chose to stick with regular Kenny Stabler through the nine games.

The Oilers have just now come to a "must" game following three straight losses, and it is likely they will have a change of quarterback.

TCU coach claims innocence

United Press International

FORT WORTH — An assistant basketball coach Thursday denied involvement in alleged recruiting violations that resulted in the National Collegiate Athletic Association placing the school on probation for one year.

The probation will not affect the university's eligibility for postseason competition or television appearances in basketball, the NCAA's Committee on Infractions said.

TCU assistant basketball coach Gary Fenske denied any involvement in the violations.

"Now all I can do is repeat what I said before," Fenske said during a morning news conference. "I didn't do it. I did not violate the NCAA recruiting rules in 1979 or any other time."

Fenske said he was shocked when he learned the NCAA was conducting an inquiry into his recruiting practices.

"I was, however, certain the matter would end quickly because I knew I had done nothing wrong," he said.

TCU Chancellor William Tucker said an independent investigation conducted by his office led him to conclude the evidence was circumstantial and not incontestable.

"Let me assure you that a complete and exhaustive effort was made to discover the facts and as a result of the investigation I found the evidence to be inconclusive," the chancellor said.

The NCAA said the university would prohibit the coach from engaging in any off-campus recruiting activities during the probationary period and would not provide the individual a salary increase during the 1982-83 academic year.

NCAA infractions committee chairman Alan Wright earlier announced from his office in Mission, Kan., that the violations in the case "involved the improper recruitment of only one prospective student-athlete by one assistant basketball coach."

Tucker and the NCAA both refused to identify the player.

The NCAA said that while recruiting the prospective student-athlete during the summer of 1979, the coach arranged for someone other than the student to perform class assignments required for two junior college classes in which the student was enrolled.

The committee said the coach also arranged for the student to be enrolled in two junior colleges at no cost to the student.

The coach also arranged for the student to be provided round-trip commercial airline transportation at no cost to the student between his junior college and his home, and, on the trip home, the coach provided the student with car transportation from an airport to the student's home, the NCAA said.

"However, the committee was quite concerned with the nature of the infractions, which appeared to represent a deliberate attempt to circumvent NCAA legislation, and the committee believed that disciplinary action against the institution and the involved coach was warranted," Wright said.
