Democrats have Hart; senator tries to boost bid

DALLAS — Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado is helping bolster the campaign funds of fellow Democrats, mixing personal charm and Reagan diatribes into a combination that could boost his own aspirations in coming years.

During the weekend Hart appeared at fundraisers on behalf of Rep. Martin Frost, seeking re-election in 1982. An estimated $175,000 was raised during a dinner and reception.

"I wanted to bring someone down who is a new voice on a national scale," said Frost. "People always say, 'Who are the new leaders in the Democratic Party?' Sen. Hart is a new leader."

Hart first achieved national prominence in spearheading the ill-fated presidential campaign of former Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D. He is now himself considered a potential contender for the party's presidential nod in 1984.

"It's much too early to be speculating," Hart said. He said, however, he had not dismissed a possible presidential bid.

Criticizing Reagan's economic program, Hart said: "(Reagan) bought an economic theory and applied it at the wrong time. The whole thing is becoming unraveled."

He said the Democratic Party is far from dead and that most Americans would return to the fold soon.

"They'd have us believe the time has come when we can't afford compassion, we can't afford generosity and we can't afford vision," he said. "The vast majority of Americans still believe and always will believe in a fair and just, equitable society."

The fundraisers were a $250 a plate dinner that attracted several hundred and a $10-per-person beer and peanuts reception that drew even more.

Autumn leaves are finally falling

Leaves such as this one are falling all around the Texas A&M campus. Cooler weather is finally here. And even cooler weather is yet to come. A cold front blew into Sunday night.

Skaters, retarded citizens to benefit from super skate

The local chapter of the Association for Retarded Citizens will sponsor a super skate at Pooh's Park Nov. 21 to benefit the mentally retarded.

Skaters, backed by sponsors who pledge money for each mile skated, can skate for 10 hours with 10-minute rest periods each hour, chairperson Lisa Shelby said. Sponsors can pledge a minimum of 5 cents per mile for each skater. Anyone is eligible to skate.

Pledges will be collected afterwards. Skates, T-shirts, trophies and games will be awarded to participants collecting the most money.

Portions of the proceeds will be used locally for a Christmas party, a resource library and educational materials for retarded persons, Shelby said. Most of the funds, however, will go to the national and state-level organization.

The ARC includes retarded as well as mentally retarded persons. Most ARC members have had an associated retarded person, Shelby said.

Bake sales, garage sales, skate benefits and fees from 100 local members help fund ARC. However, most of the support comes from private donations of businesses and community members, Shelby said.

Safety standards subverted, former labor secretary claims

AUSTIN — The Reagan administration subverted a good law by softening federal occupational safety standards at the expense of the lives and health of workers, says Ray Marshall, former U.S.

secretary of labor. "While workers were getting killed on the job or getting cancer, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration inspectors were looking for split toilet seats," he said.

The Reagan economic policy, he said, "believe that you can solve these health safety concepts in the place."

In an interview published Monday, Marshall said Reagan was undermining the strength there was to the economy and the price of his success was "the longest period of substantial unemployment since the 1930s."

Despite his differences with Reagan, Marshall had respected the president's apparent concern for Congress.

"The administration was skillful in the use of public relations," he said. People who believe there is an easy answer, said, and the Reagan administration, promised a painless answer.

Marshall, currently on the economics faculty at the University of Texas, is teaching labor and economic policy at the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Administration and a labor economics course at UT.
