Car buff has offer for fuehrer's ex

United Press International
PHOENIX, Ariz. — If Eva Braun, Adolf Hitler's mistress, is still alive, car collector Tom Barrett is willing to return the 1938 Mercedes Benz the fuehrer gave her.
"It will be a hell of a gift if we can get her to come out of hiding," Barrett said Tuesday in response to a British medical journal report stating that the body found next to Hitler in the final days of World War II may not have been Braun's.
The report was based on an extensive study of dental charts. Barrett says the gold, super-charged Mercedes 540K is valued at $500,000. He plans to sell the car at his January auction, but he said he would withdraw it from the sale if Braun is still alive.
The Braun car, Barrett said, has a swastika hood ornament rather than the Mercedes emblem.
The car was taken on a U.S. tour for charity about seven years ago, Barrett said, but has not been shown in recent years. It is being refurbished in Chico, Calif.

What to do if you 'hab a hed code' and want relief

United Press International
Is it safe to kiss when you or the kisser has a common cold?
Will chicken noodle soup make the common cold go away? Vitamin C? These questions come up every year around this time when the chill winds start to blow and millions of Americans come down with common cold blahs — chills, fevers, runny noses, sore throats, coughs, congested sinuses.
All these things interfere with love, life, work and studying styles — and even speech sometimes, as evidenced by people calling the office and telling the boss: "I hab a code in de hed."
Kissing is okay as long as the smoocher or smoochee has a cold caused by a rhinovirus. So says Dr. Owen Hendley, professor of pediatrics and director of infectious diseases at the University of Virginia Medical School Center, Charlottesville, Va.
Hendley, a long-time grantee of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, made the statement in reporting at the Canadian Hospital Infection Control Association as reported in the newsletter "Hospital Infection Control."
Hendley came to this conclusion after putting rhinovirus into the eyes, nose or mouth of volunteers. It was found one virus particle could cause infection if placed in the eye or nose. But 1,000 particles would not cause an infection in the mouth. Conclusion: the rhinovirus virus, which is linked to perhaps as many as half of the common colds, does not grow in the mouth and probably cannot be transmitted orally — kissing, for one.
However, the only way to know if you have a rhinovirus is to have a culture done — before you smooch.
At the National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, Md., experts were asked how goes the search for a vaccine against the common cold. Answer: There isn't any, and probably won't be any.
"A factor common to all the common colds has not been isolated," said Joan Hartman of the NIAID. "That's why there's no immunization."
Treatments vary. The most common one is the chicken noodle soup treatment.
There's more than the power of suggestion at work here. Dr. Marvin Sackner, chief of medicine at Mt. Sinai Medical Center in Miami Beach, found chicken soup cleared mucus from sinuses faster than other hot beverages.
Science knows that a cold is self-limited, by the way. That means most colds run their course, no matter what, and go away.
"Given this fact (that colds are self-limited)," the Harvard Medical Letter says, "it is amazing that Americans spend over $30 million each year for non-prescription cold remedies, including aspirin."

If there are complications, such as pneumonia developing from bacterial complications, antibiotics may be needed, but since most colds are caused by viruses, and antibiotics don't work against viruses, it's a waste of money and antibiotics to use the superdrug against the common cold, authorities say.
On vitamin C and the common cold, the jury's still out, according to some authorities but others like Dr. Linus Pauling, Nobel prize winner and chief drum major for vitamin C against the common cold, disagree.
"Despite several studies there is no good evidence that high doses of vitamin C are effective in preventing or treating the common cold," says the "Harvard Medical Letter."
"The only certain value of vitamin C is the prevention and treatment of scurvy," says "The Book of Health," edited by Dr. Ernst L. Wynder, president of the American Health Foundation.
At the NIAID, evidence shows common cold viruses most likely are spread from nose to hands, the hands are not washed frequently and well, and especially certainly times, such as after blowing the nose, cold viruses stay on the hands a while.
Research shows they may get off the skin and survive for hours on non-porous surfaces such as cabinet or desk tops and even doorknobs. A person touching the surface, getting the germs on hands, then rubbing nose or eyes with the hand harboring the germs can give himself the infection.
Studies also show more colds start on a Monday than any other day. Authorities say this supports the theory that a cold is picked up during the week, incubates over the weekend and becomes full-blown by Monday morning.
Cold weather does not cause colds and neither does getting chilled. They are caused by person-to-person contact.
Treatment tips, from Dr. Keith Sehnert's "How to Be Your Own Doctor Sometimes":
When to call the doctor: when temperature goes over 101, when increase in throat pain; when white or yellow spots on tonsils; when, when having shaking chills and chattering teeth, when there's shortness of breath or chest pain or earache or pain in sinuses; when coughing produces green or gray sputum during the day. Or there is no improvement in the cold by the fifth day.

Curator saves Texas artifacts

United Press International
CANYON, Texas — Mary Frederickson says attempts 50 years ago to restore a Confederate flag used by the 3rd Texas Cavalry in the Civil war was done with the best intentions.
But good intentions are not enough to prolong the "lives" of artifacts that are "just like people," says Frederickson, director and chief curator of the West Texas Conservatory.
The conservatory, part of the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum, is the only facility of its kind in the southern United States. It is located inconspicuously on a corner of Canyon's town square in an old post office building rented from a city bank for $100 a month.
The state of Texas recently appropriated $1 million to staff and equip the conservatory, which restores old documents, photographs, paintings and other articles damaged by time and, in some cases, the careless restoration efforts of others.
The cavalry flag for instance, was "restored" in the 1930's by a woman Frederickson calls "the flag lady." The technique involved the use of paint and chain stitching that further damaged the flag and the threading must now be painstakingly removed.
"The development of conservation science has been stymied by some people who called themselves conservators and who didn't want anyone else in the field," she says. "The flag lady had a patent on her technique and that was a good thing because no one else was able to use it." She says others have tried to restore paintings by spreading onions and bread on them.
"Conservation is not in the dark ages any more," she said.
But most of the work done by Frederickson and her staff involves reversing the ravages of time on objects never submitted to restoration efforts.
Resting on an easel in a sunlit corner of the old post office is a flaking portrait of former Texas Governor Miriam A. "Ma" Ferguson, who served from 1925 to 1927 and again from 1933 to 1935.
The painting, which hung for years in the state capital rotunda in Austin, must be cleaned and each crack filled with hand-ground powdered pigments. Frederickson says oil paint cannot be used because fading would reveal the restoration process.
The state legislature has a contract with the conservatory to restore many other objects, including the San Jacinto Flag. That flag, carried by Gen. Sam Houston's troops in the famed 1836 battle and defeat of Mexican troops under Gen. Lopez de Santa Anna, currently hangs behind the speaker in the Texas House.
