Medieval dance class to be offered Saturday

Hear ye, hear ye. All ye faithful inhabitants of the Shire are cordially invited to partake in a Medieval Dance Workshop.

The workshop, sponsored by Texas A&M's Society for Creative Anachronism, will be held in the main floor of Zachry Engineering Center, Saturday from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. All Bryan-College Station residents are members of the Shire and are eligible to attend.

SCA is an organization for those interested in life during the Middle Ages, explained SCA chronicler (public relations person) Lori Wolf, said.

The workshop will teach participants medieval court dancing — called brasles, Grand Pavannes and others.

The cost for the dance workshop is 50 cents for Texas A&M students and faculty and $1 for others. SCA members will be dressed in medieval fashion, and lender costumes will be available to anyone wanting to wear them.

Painter visits Vandiver, classes

Scottish lord discusses Russian artist

Self-exiled from his native Russia, hounded from Germany by the Nazis, Vassily Kandinsky nevertheless managed to influence an entire generation of artists.

Speaking to a small audience in the Memorial Student Center Thursday night, Lord George Douglas Haig, himself a painter, discussed the spiritual and artistic development of Kandinsky's work.

Kandinsky, influenced by turn-of-the-century, avant-garde art and Byzantine icons, was a major force in the creation of the Bauhaus school of art in Weimar Germany. He was a great artist, Haig said, because he was adventurous and broke through artistic barriers.

In discussing his own work, Haig dissociated himself from Kandinsky's rational, logical approach to using rhythm and color.

"When it comes to color, I'm like a great animal — I just go and look at it and decide what I like."

Haig was invited to speak here by University President Frank Vandiver, who has known him for about 10 years. The two met when Vandiver decided to write a book on Haig's father, the late Field Marshal Douglas Haig. Vandiver had been writing a book about Gen. John J. Pershing and became fascinated by the field marshal, a close associate of the general during World War I.

"Haig had a general reputation as the great butcher of the Western Front, but that's entirely a myth," Vandiver said. He said his work on the book is proceeding slowly, and he expects to finish it in about five years.

Haig is not only the son of a field marshal, but also the cousin of a famous general — Gen. Alexander Haig, the U.S. secretary of state whom he met recently.

Rezoning request contested in two-hour council meeting

By RANDY CLEMENTS

Battalion Staff
The final plan for the Woodson Village, Section 2 subdivision was tabled Thursday night after two hours of debate between the College Station City Council, nearby residents and the developer.

Residents from Thomas Street, Pershing Drive and Hawthorne Street contested the proposed plan because of sewer and drainage problems every time it rains. Charles L. Boyd, a Pershing Street resident, said that if the subdivision were developed, rainwater wouldn't be able to drain into Bee Creek. The creek fills every time it rains, without the additional proposed 25 lots, he said.

Boyd suggested the plan be tabled until the sewer and drainage problem is corrected.

Garland Cannon, a Hawthorn Street resident, said the development should be denied because the flooding is a health, welfare and safety problem now and would worsen with the development.

Also, the city should take care of the flooding so the land can be properly developed, he said.

City Engineer Elrey Ash said infiltration into the sewer lines when it rains adds to the flooding problem. There is 30 miles of line that must be checked out, he said. The council tabled the plan until the engineering staff can tell it when an infiltration study can be done and what the study would cost.

In other action, the council tabled a rezoning request for about 22 acres from single family residential to a medium density apartment zone because the overall area needs to be considered. The 22 acres, on the south side of Southwest Parkway and 600' from the East Bypass, will be considered at the Nov. 19 Planning and Zoning Commission meeting.
