National Artificial hearts may sustain lives in future surgery

United Press International
PHILADELPHIA—A Temple University Hospital surgeon hopes to obtain government approval to implant artificial hearts into living patients.
Dr. Jacob Kolff, chief of cardiothoracic surgery at Temple University Hospital, has implanted artificial hearts in brain-dead patients and maintained their body. Kolff said he is close to receiving permission from Temple's Research Review Committee to use the device on living patients. Once university permission is received, Kolff must get approval from the Food and Drug Administration.
"I think we're nearly through with our own investigative review board," said Kolff. "After that, it's a matter of getting the papers and submitting them to the FDA."
Kolff said he and a Temple surgical team want to implant as many as six more artificial hearts in neurologically-dead people "before we consider ourselves ready" to work with living patients. He said he was unsure how long it would take to obtain the go-ahead from the FDA.
However, the doctor added, it would still "be a couple of decades down the road" before surgeons reach the point where they can implant artificial hearts in people to extend their lives for any appreciable amount of time. The experiments he is seeking on living people would only be to obtain more test information.
During a five-hour operation Nov. 7, Kolff and his team implanted an artificial heart, a pneumatically driven pump called the Jarvik 7, in the body of a 28-year-old man who had been declared legally dead.
The pump maintained cardiovascular circulation and the functions of the kidneys and liver for 10 hours before fluid in the lungs forced the team to end the experiment, Kolff said.
It was the second time that the heart had been successfully implanted by Kolff. On May 3, a Jarvik pump was implanted for the first time ever in a human. A woman declared neurologically dead was kept on the device for two hours.
Kolff said in the second case the patient was taken out of the operating room to the hospital's intensive care unit.
"We have to take small steps and just try to extend the experiment further and further until we're completely satisfied we can have patients leave the intensive care area or even leave the hospital," he said.
Kolff is the only surgeon to have implanted the Jarvik heart into brain-dead humans and maintained body functions. Dr. Denton Cooley of the Texas Heart Institute has implanted other artificial devices into living humans who were awaiting heart transplants, but the patients died after transplant surgery.

Balloon revives WW II memories

United Press International
BLY, Ore.—The successful flight of the first manned balloon to cross the Pacific Ocean recalled grim memories for the postmaster of the tiny southeast Oregon town of Bly.
Late in World War II, an unmanned Japanese balloon bomb landed and exploded at a Sunday school picnic near Bly, killing five children and a pregnant woman. They were the only known World War II casualties from enemy action on the U.S. mainland.
Vernetia Hadley recalled memories of the balloon bomb after hearing about this week's manned balloon flight. Hadley was been postmaster in Bly for 23 years.
The pastor of the Christian Missionary Alliance took a group of children on a picnic.
"It was just a terrible thing," she said. "Our pastor from the church, Archie Mitchell, had taken a bunch of kids out there on a picnic. We were just lucky because we didn't take our two children to the picnic because the weather was bad."
The pastor's wife, Elsy Mitchell, was one of those killed when the bomb exploded. The bomb was one of many the Japanese sent over in desperation moves toward the end of the war.
The Japanese Imperial Army sent thousands of unmanned bomb-carrying balloons across the Pacific late in the war, but fell harmlessly into the ocean, but a few made it to land, including the one which killed the five children and Mrs. Mitchell.
The five children killed were Jay Bifford, 13; Edward Engen, 13; Sherman Shoemaker, 11; and Joan Patzke, 13; and her brother, Dick, 14.
In May of this year, a group of Japanese scientists had planned—although it didn't work out—to send a balloon crew carrying flowers across the Pacific in memory of the six killed in World War II.
Hidenasa Kimura, who headed the Japanese group of scientists, said, "We plan to carry flowers for children killed by the bomb-carrying balloons during the war."
He said, "Unlike other balloon projects, our experiment is of peaceful and scientific use of high-altitude balloons in the future."
Kimura said in May he was aware of plans for this week's balloon flight by Japanese businessman Rocky Aoki and his American associates.
"The biggest difference is that Aoki's is for adventurism while ours is to promote peace and for scientific experiment, he said."

Malpractice suit appeal is upheld

United Press International
SAN FRANCISCO—The California state Court of Appeals upheld a $2 million fraud and malpractice award to a woman who lost both breasts and parts of her shoulders and thighs after breast enlargement injections.
Friday the court said the ruling against Dr. Frank L. Gaunt of San Jose, Calif. was justified and reasonable as punishment for the injuries to Mary L. Nelson in 1968.
The court opinion said Gaunt injected silicone into Mrs. Nelson on May 28, 1968, the same day she came to his office to inquire about the procedure. Gaunt told her the injections had "absolutely no side effects," the court said.
Five months later Mrs. Nelson noticed several lumps in her left breast. By 1971 doctors decided her health was endangered by the silicone, which had spread to her thighs and shoulders and killed the surrounding tissue.
The court rejected Gaunt's argument that Mrs. Nelson's lawyer prejudiced the case by calling him a "monster" and a "lying animal" and referred to him as "Dr. Malpractice" in his closing statement at the trial.
The plaintiff's attorneys said Gaunt knew the silicone procedure could only be performed by licensed doctors since the injections were experimental and he had been arrested three months before on misdemeanor charges of performing the injections without a license.
The court upheld the verdicts of negligence, malpractice and intentional infliction of emotional stress because, as a result of his arrest, Gaunt must have known the procedure was unlawful.
