Anti-nuclear group cites project 'coverup'

United Press International
SAN ANTONIO — An anti-nuclear group has sent the Nuclear Regulatory Commission a statement alleging a coverup is taking place at the problem-plagued South Texas Nuclear Project.

The San Antonio Citizens Concerned about Nuclear Power wants the removal of Houston Lighting & Power as the project's managing partner and revocation of the construction permit.

The group claimed Monday HL&P withheld from the NRC damaging details of a consultant's report that outlined serious design flaws in the nuclear plant.

Coordinator Lanny Sinkin said HL&P kept the unfavorable consultant report by Quadrex Corp. secret after receiving it last May, and he claimed the alleged coverup was the "result of direct involvement of top HL&P management personnel."

HL&P spokesman Don Beeth said Monday the Quadrex report was made available to the NRC one week after it was received and was sent to the NRC at its request about one month ago. He said the report's findings were not as disastrous as opponents claimed.

"Serious, yes," Beeth said. "Catastrophic, no."

The report said Brown & Root, prime contractor on the project until it was replaced earlier this month, used designs from reactors of other nuclear plants without checking to see whether the engineering meshed with that of the South Texas project.

It also said Brown & Root engineers improperly logged their work, which Sinkin said made it impossible to determine whether the plant has been safely designed and constructed thus far.

& Root design programs were a disaster," Sinkin said. "The report taken as a whole creates the belief that all construction to date is based on inadequate engineering."

Beeth rejected Sinkin's contention that overall design of the project was faulty.

"This sounds to me like just another in the long string of attacks on the project," Beeth said. "The NRC has not seen fit to get all excited about it."

"We don't see anything that is not fixable with a reasonable effort."

He said the bulk of Quadrex's findings dealt with future construction and had little bearing on in-place construction.

The nuclear project, located southwest of Bay City, is six years behind schedule and 400 percent over its original $1.1 billion budget.

Legislative group to study amount of teaching time

United Press International
AUSTIN — Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, said her legislative group hopes to determine whether teachers dealing with migrant children are given adequate time to teach or are spending too much time administering tests.

Texas schools may be over-tested because they are involved in a number of different federal programs, said Glossbrenner, chairman of a special House subcommittee studying migrant children.

William N. Kirby, deputy commissioner for finance and program administration of the Texas Education Agency, told the subcommittee at its first meeting Monday that there are at least four federal programs which could involve the same migrant students, and the students could be tested separately for each program.

Glossbrenner, a former teacher said:

"The students are being counted in more than one program, and being tested to death for no good end."

"I know from experience that you cannot test kids, test them and keep testing them and still have them take the tests seriously."

Kirby said there are about 148,000 students classified as migrants in 350 Texas school districts this year, with the heaviest concentrations being in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, along the Texas-Mexico border and in West Texas.
