Aggies eligible for grants, loans

By LAURA WILLIAMS
 Battalion Reporter
 Some 250,000 sources of non-governmental aid are available to undergraduate students at Texas A&M University — and for $45, a computer will tell eligible students which scholarships and grants are available to them.
 Student College Aid, a computerized scholarship locator service in Houston, provides applicants with a list of financial aid for which they qualify. The aid is provided by corporations, foundations and other private organizations.
 "The students fill out a form telling their personal interests, grades, majors, non-academic talents and activities they are involved in," Ed Rosenwasser, College Aid business manager, said. "This is how we match up the students with the financial aid they qualify for."
 The average applicant receives 12 listings, but as many as 25 listings often are provided, he said.

"If we don't provide the student with more than five sources, we refund the $45 along with the sources we've found," Rosenwasser said.
 Fewer scholarships and grants are offered to upperclassmen; therefore, juniors and seniors are only charged $28, he said.
 Because it takes two to four weeks to process the listings, and months for scholarships and grants to be processed, students who need financial aid for spring 1982 should contact Student College Aid promptly.
 "We guarantee the source lists, but we can't guarantee that the student will receive the financial aid he applies for," Rosenwasser said.
 Texas A&M upperclassmen also can apply for non-governmental funds through the Spring Awards program. Applications for Spring Awards can be turned in to the financial aid office in the YMCA Building in January.

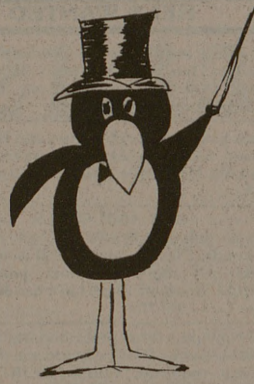

Park personnel topic of seminar

By SHERYLON JENKINS
 Battalion Reporter
 The need to train personnel for Costa Rica's national parks will be the topic of a brown bag seminar Tuesday.
 The seminar, scheduled for noon to 1:30 p.m. in 251 Bizzell, is based on a 10-day visit to Manuel Antonio National Park in Costa Rica that Dr. Allan S. Mills, an assistant professor in the Texas A&M recreation and parks department, and graduate research assistant John Titre made last summer.
 Mills said the discussion and slide presentation combines his personal observations with his talks with park officials, forestry service personnel and rangers in Costa Rica.
 The seminar will describe the situation in Costa Rica's national parks to show the need for training in most Latin American countries, Mills said. He said he hopes the seminar will stimulate interest in the need for park training.
 Mills' research is in cooperation with the International Ecological Development Training Institute, which is composed of the World Leisure and Recreation Association, the Tennessee Valley Authorities and the Texas A&M parks and recreation department.

 Costa Rica was the first country to request assistance from the institute, he said.
 The seminar is sponsored by the Title XII Strengthening Grant Program, through Office of International Programs, which is continuing a series of semi-monthly seminars to increase and coordinate international interest and to provide information concerning needs, resources and research in international areas.
