Special meeting may have to be called

Council awaits committee plaque vote

The MSC Council may call a special meeting later this week to decide on the placement of a plaque honoring former students who have given from $50,000 to $100 million to Texas A&M University, Doug Dedeker, president of the Council, said.

At the scheduled Council meeting Monday night, members could not make a decision on the Presidents Association plaque because the Council had not received a recommendation from its Building Studies Committee.

The committee handles all activities involving the use of the MSC, and based on its recommendations, the Council approves or disapproves actions involving the MSC.

Paul Fisher, vice president of operations, told Council members about the plaque, which the Development Office would like hung on the north wall of the MSC main lounge.

The Development Office brought the idea of the plaque, which is 10 feet 3 inches by 15 feet 3 inches, to the attention of the committee.

The committee will make a decision on the plaque tonight at 7:30.

Fisher said the Development Office was asking for as prompt a decision as possible. Construction on the plaque has already started and the office plans on unveiling it during spring break.

The committee had asked the Council for authority to make a standing decision on the plaque so a special meeting would not have to be scheduled and an answer could be given to the office as soon as possible.

However, Council members defeated the motion, with Dedeker saying that since the Development Office and the Council had worked together so well, the office should have the benefit of a thorough discussion on the issue.

In other actions, the Council passed a proposal for an MSC personnel filing system, which will help members know how they are progressing within the organization. Also, the files will provide information on where students have gone once they've left the university, for fund-raising purposes.

The system, to be kept by the office of MSC Student Development, will contain personal information on Council and Directorate members in accordance with the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974.
