Cable television makes Yuletide shopping a snap with help of telephone

United Press International
NEW YORK — The ghost of Bing Crosby continues to assure us that "Christmastime in the city" is all silver bells and roasting chestnuts, but anyone who has tackled the imagery with a shopping trip knows it's also wet feet, runny noses, rude clerks and severely elbowed rib cages.
At least that's the way it was until Carl Meinelt, Joe Mansi and Gary Melchiorre came along. Now chestnuts can be roasted by an open television set and all that harrowing Christmas shopping can be done with no more energy than it takes to dial a telephone. Meinelt, Mansi and Melchiorre, operating as American National Cable Communications, Inc., have married cable television to the Consumers Distributor catalogue, and this year — at least in the New York and Los Angeles areas — the "Video Shopper" is a reality.

"We wondered if we were getting in too early, but we decided we wanted in on the ground floor before some big company decided to jump in, we'd have to take a chance," said Meinelt. "This brand new market."

Just about every market in cable television gold rush is a one, but the three New York entrepreneurs are the first to state firm claim to the long-cherished concept of shopping at home. tube, catalogue and 800 line number.

Eventually, Meinelt hopes fledgling company will be the Christmas stockings via their interactive cable on a channel complete with full-scale demonstrations and a consumer advisor to guide the way. But that's have to wait until such concepts are common nationwide.

Under this year's ANCCI setup, about 1 million subscribers to cable systems on east and west coasts watch regular cable programming for Video Shopper "interactives."
These television spots cost more than the familiar network peddlers of tape and paper towels. Each "interactives" presents a factual video down on a product in the Consumers Distributor catalogue. People who like the product have only to dial an 800 number to order the merchandise.

The merchandise then is delivered or picked up at the nearest Consumers Distributor sales room outlet.

Meinelt said eventually hopes to refer his customers full-time access channel containing nothing but product demonstrations by experts who will point out the advantages and disadvantages of models in various ranges.

All of this should terrify the tail merchant by setting up an empty department store aisle. Yuletide dancing in his head, Meinelt said no such attitude surfaced.

"The retailer is the backbone of the community," he said. "The chains are looking for any way possible to add on sales. Everybody looking at Cable TV and I think they'll participate. Today the producing and promoting of own mass catalogues. They're already fishing the waters."
After a nationwide sales beginning in January 1981, ANCCI signed up Consumers Distributor, with 108 outlets, its first participating retailer.

Forget silver bells and silver Santas. Their best sales are where the consumer is concerned are those wet feet, runny noses, rude clerks and elbowed rib cages.
The alternative — shoppers eggnog in front of a television — should be all the persuasion most people need.
