Dungeons deliver horror to author

NEW YORK — A few years ago, novelist Rona Jaffe read about a 16-year-old computer genius who vanished from the Michigan State University campus where he had been a fanatic player of the fantasy game "Dungeons and Dragons."

At that moment, her bestseller, "Mazes and Monsters," was born, and next fall, CBS will bring it to television.

It's an eerie tale — evocative of Rod Serling's old "Twilight Zone" — but like the best of the strange, it is anchored firmly in truth.

The truth, in this case, is a disturbing one — the proposition that the line between fantasy and reality is indistinguishable for many of today's young. For them, the "game" becomes the reality and reality fades into an irritating dream. In Jaffe's view, economics and the saving of traditional family structures are responsible.

"This is the first generation where people will not be able to live as well as their parents," she said. "They grow up in a house with two cars and lots of rooms and they get married and they don't know if they'll ever have a house. They don't even know if they'll ever be able to afford a kid."

Players of "Dungeons and Dragons" don't have to worry about such things — at least while the game is in progress. In their fantasy roles — the fighter, the wizard, the holy man, the elf — they plunge into a dark, Tolkienesque world of adventure, danger and pursuit of treasure to be wrested by force or guile from the forces of evil as a roll of the dice and a "controller" may dictate.

The real "Dungeons and Dragons" player who inspired Jaffe's book was said to have worked out his fantasies in a labyrinth of steam tunnels beneath the college campus. No one ever will know for sure. A detective hired by his family finally found him wandering in a daze. He killed himself without ever telling anyone what really happened to him.

Jaffe's four protagonists use caverns near their fictional college for their game and carry it to a chilling conclusion.

"I had to play in order to get into the spirit of it," Jaffe said of her research for the book. "I'd never even heard of it when I read the newspaper account."

"I changed certain things. In 'Dungeons and Dragons,' you have to be the character you roll with the dice. When I played, I rolled to be an elf and I didn't like that. I wanted to be a fighter. I'm an elf in real life — I want to be an elf in a game!"

"I thought it would be more interesting if they could pick their own characters. They could go into their own psyches and bring out a lot of things they couldn't work out in real life."

In the past two decades, youngsters have worked their way out — none too successfully — through an unprecedented flocking to religious cults, drug use and fantasy.

"I think they're looking for family stability, which has been kind of knocked apart in the 20 years," Jaffe said. "They were a time when the kids all grew up — there were more of them because of the baby boom — and they decided they wanted to change things."

"In the '70s, when people got disillusioned and realized they couldn't change things, they started to investigate their own heads. That was what we called the 'me' generation."

"Many of the women I went to college with and many who write to me when they've seen me on TV or read my books have been through the exact same experience — their bands walked out. He said, 'There must be more, I'm getting to be middle-aged, I'm 40 years old, I want a young one goodbye.'"

The children, she said, have been the victims.

"The kids have grown up without a kind of family stability that maybe never existed, but which we seem to think existed," she said. "In the '50s, in that people had rotten family relationships, but they stayed together because you just didn't get divorced."

Texas briefs

United Press International CORPUS CHRISTI — Investigators said they haven't determined what caused a Coast Guard airplane to overturn and crash on landing, injuring two members of its eight-man crew.

The HC-131 twin-engine craft was on landing approach path about 5 p.m. when it crashed and overturned on a runway, said Coast Guard Lt. Steve Sparks.

Aircraft commander Lt. J.G. Michael Augusta suffered minor head and neck injuries, and flight engineer Petty Officer 1st Class Gary Anderson received a possible leg fracture. Six other crewmen escaped injury.

The plane was returning from a routine training mission in a fog at the time, Sparks said.

Victims identified

WHITE HOUSE — Authorities have identified the four people killed in a weekend mobile home fire believed caused by faulty electrical wiring.

The victims of the Sunday blaze were identified as Richard Thornell, 26; Don Schnorbus Jr., 19; Davis Gilliland, 31, and

Official appointed

AUSTIN — Sid Wieser, executive director of the Texas Department of Community Affairs, has announced the appointment of Larry Crumpton as deputy director of the state agency.

Crumpton was serving as director of TDCA's local government services division before the appointment.

John Clary has been appointed to temporarily replace Crumpton as division director.

President announced

CANYON — The West Texas State University Board of Regents have named Dr. Gal Shannon to replace outgoing President Max Sherman.

Shannon, who has served as executive vice president of the university since 1977, will begin his duties as president immediately, a university spokeswoman said.

He replaces Sherman, who resigned to run for the state attorney general's office.

The board of regents gave Shannon a one-year contract and said a search would now be begun for a new executive vice president.
