Daughter returned to mother

United Press International
HOUSTON — A 17-year-old Dallas County woman who had her infant daughter on a ton doorstep has been granted permanent custody of the child.

Family Court Judge Baum made the decision day at the recommendation of Harris County Child Welfare officials, who had temporary custody of the child.

Officials said the woman birth to the child secretly in December while visiting her and stepmother and, in January, left the child on a neighbor's doorstep.

The girl was allowed to return to Dallas after she had been attending day care courses, officials said.

Reports from Dallas Child Welfare officials on the mother's progress are good.

Finals

The registrar's office has a difficult time meeting deadlines, and is put under more pressure when a student who is unsure of his graduation is constantly stopping in to check, he said. Instructors must deal with marginal students who ask for grade changes, and the students are under pressure from relatives or employers, Gillespie said.

If a marginal student fails to meet his graduation requirements because of one class, Gillespie said, he may take the final in that class to raise his grade. However, the student will not be allowed to graduate until the following semester, he added.

The anxiety for all might be lessened if all graduating seniors were required to take finals, Gillespie said.

Dr. Murray H. Milford, professor of soil and crop sciences, said another, and apparently less popular, suggestion for relieving pressure would be to delay graduation one week. Finals for graduating seniors still would not be mandatory, he said.

Under Milford's suggestion, final grades for graduating seniors would not be due at the registrar's office until the Friday of dead week, and graduation would be the weekend after finals.

Milford's plan is intended to eliminate what he calls "kill week," the week before dead week. A significant number of graduating seniors lose honor graduate status specifically because of excess work due during kill week, Milford said. Not only do graduating seniors have exams in almost all their classes, but many also have speeches, reports and other projects that other students don't have to turn in until dead week.

The result of such pressure often ends in mental, physical and emotional exhaustion for the student, Milford said. If graduation were delayed one week, he added, these students would have that one extra week to complete those assignments.

Food poisoning cases prompt meat recall

United Press International
WASHINGTON — A Connecticut firm that ships meat to numerous states has voluntarily recalled 130,000 pounds of corned beef after food poisoning organisms were discovered in the product, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

No cases of illness have been reported by people who ate the corned beef with salmonella organisms even though recalls often follow cases of food poisoning. This case was discovered in routine meat testing by agriculture inspectors.

Salmonella causes salmonellosis, or food poisoning. Food poisoning can be prevented with proper handling of meat and the organism can be destroyed through cooking.

The cooked corned beef was produced by Mosey's Corned Beef Inc. in Bloomfield, Conn., agriculture officials said. Corned and roast beef from other plants are also being analyzed.

Donald Houston, administrator of the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, said a precautionary recall was initiated because 130,000 pounds of potentially contaminated meat were distributed to delicatessens and similar retail outlets in 19 states, including Texas.

Houston said consumers who think they may have purchased suspect meat should contact the store where they bought it. Mosey's is notifying its distributors to return suspect meat, which produced between Jan. 8 and Feb. 1.
