Quirks in the News

United Press International LOS ANGELES — Five tons of marijuana stored at police headquarters has created a space and odor problem in the basement property room, but there is no evidence officers are getting "high" from the smell of the illegal weed.
 "Storing 11,200 pounds of marijuana in the police department property room takes up a lot of space and it's giving out an awful odor," Assistant U.S. Attorney Layn Phillips said in a petition asking to destroy the marijuana.
 U.S. District Judge Mathew Byrne Monday planned to hear the motion for permission to destroy the marijuana, which has been photographed and weighed for use as evidence in the case in which it was seized.
 The marijuana was confiscated Jan. 3 in one of the biggest drug hauls on the West Coast in several years.

Gospel Jail

United Press International BIRMINGHAM — There are so many people who want to preach at the Jefferson County Jail that even Billy Graham would have to stand in line.
 Warden Lionel Bragan says he is besieged by would-be jailhouse preachers, and he says some are simply looking for a captive audience.
 "They think there are 500 people up there going to hell and they're going to do something for them," he said.
 Bragan refuses to turn the jail chapel over completely to all the preachers who want it because that would mean canceling adult basic education and special reading classes held there now.
 The jail already has Sunday school and two Sunday church services, mass on Wednesday, Catholic counseling on Thursday, Bible study on Thursday, Catholic services for women on Monday, and evening services three times a week.
 Requests to preach are turned over to the jail's regular minister, the Rev. John Olin Gay, who says he asks would-be preachers "Bible questions" to see if they are qualified.
