in the United States, he said.

In addition, Johnson said candidates from within the System also are being considered.

The names of applicants are kept confidential because publication of them may jeopardize their current positions at other universities.

The goal of the nine-member search committee is to narrow the number of candidates to about 10. The list then will be submitted to Vandiver for approval.

Vandiver will choose the new vice president; however, all such appointments must be approved by the Texas A&M University System Board of Regents.

Johnson said the committee should have a list of candidates by March or April. After initial approval, candidates will visit Texas A&M for more extensive interviews and screening.

Persons being screened for the vice presidential position not only will visit with search committee members, Johnson said, but also will talk to students, faculty and administrative officials so they can get an overall view of Texas A&M.

If things go as planned, a new vice president should be selected before the fall semester begins, Johnson said.

Search committee members include: Dr. Perry L. Adkisson, deputy chancellor for agriculture; Dr. George F. Bass, distinguished professor of sociology and anthropology; Mary Helen Bowers, director of Educational Information Services; Dr. A.E. Martell, distinguished professor of chemistry; Howard Vestal, vice president for business affairs; and Nancy Nelson, a graduate student in business administration.

According to the job description, the vice president for academic affairs "is responsible for all aspects of the academic function, including planning, budgeting, supervising and reviewing programs in resident instruction, research and continuing education."
