Video games blasted from youngster's orbits

United Press International
BOSTON — Electronic starships and galactic invaders won't be enticing youngsters to play hooky or squander their lunch money in suburban Marlboro anymore.

Now it's illegal to play the coin-operated games during school hours, much to the relief of parents worried that their children were turning into video addicts.

The ordinance, approved 11-0 by the City Council, prohibits anyone under 18 from playing the games during class hours and bans games within 1,500 feet of public schools.

Operators can be fined $50 for each offense and have their licenses revoked.

Mayor Joseph Ferrecchia, who strongly supports the ban, said Tuesday there are no fewer than 87 licensed video games, and an untold number of unlicensed machines, in pizza parlors, grocery stores, bars and barber shops in the community of 31,000 people.

"We had to act fast to curb their growth and availability," Ferrecchia said. "This thing was starting to take hold at a pace beyond what anyone expected."

"An alarming pattern was developing. Children were spending lunch money on the machines and were going without the meal."

"The alarm really rung when the operators of the machines tried to convince me they offered a better educational experience than school itself."

But the mayor said he doesn't think the town's problems are over yet. He's worried an arcade packed with the video vipers may spring up.

"A congregation of young people in one place has spinoffs," Ferrecchia said, citing drug exposure as a particularly onerous possibility.

The U.S. Supreme Court is expected to rule by July whether children have a constitutional right to enter arcades and play video games. The case involves a Mesquite ordinance that bars youths 17 and under from entering arcades unless accompanied by a parent or guardian.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans has struck down the law as a violation of a child's right of association, prompting Mesquite's pending appeal to the Supreme Court.
