deported, a federal judge ruled. Marcello's defense attorney Mark Mancini reacted bitterly to U.S. District Judge Morey Sear's opinion Wednesday, saying his client should be treated like an American convicted of a crime nstead of like a foreigner subject to deportation.

Attorneys for the so-called "Little Man" of Gulf Coast crime had asked Sear to bar the federal government from using Marcel-lo's conviction in the Louisiana Brilab trial as a lever to enforce a 29-year-old deportation order against him.

"I see no reason at all for me to grant or recommend against deportation, and the motion is denied," Sear said. Sear's decision will not be appealed, Mancini said.

"He is an American criminal, but not a Tunisian criminal," Mancini said, "and the fact he's being treated differently than an American criminal is difficult to accept." Marcello was brought to the United States from Tunisia by his parents when he was 5 months old.

Mancini had urged Sear to grant the motion in consideraion of Marcello's age, 72, and family and business ties in the United States.

Jack Richardson, acting chief agent for the Border Patrol in El Paso, said Sergio Chavez Garcia, 20, reportedly tried to walk 21 refugees from Guatemala and El Salvador across the border and place them in motels late Tuesday.

A spokeswoman for the magistrate's office said the Mexican national was charged with illegally transporting the refugees, four of whom were charged as material witnesses. Richardson said Wednesday the others were being held in a Border Patrol detention center to await transportation back to their countries, and that charges against the 25 people arrested last weekend were still being considered.
