United Press International

ST. LOUIS—The case of the house-broken opossum is just one of many bizarre tales arising from the record winter in the Midwest.

"We got a call from a woman who said, 'I don't know if I'm breaking the law, but I've got a opossum living in my house,'" said Suzie Sutton, who operates the wildlife rescue center.

The woman explained she leaves a door cracked for her cats to go outside, and the opossum walked in one snowy night and curled up under a desk in her kitchen. The opossum also used the exit, until a two-foot snowfall made it impossible to go outside.

"She just put down some papers and he went over and used them," Sutton said of the opossum. "He even took one of the cats' towels to sleep on. The woman said the cats and the opossum get along just fine."

The center has had several calls from homeowners who said squirrels, birds and raccoons were stuck in furnace and fireplace flues, where they sought warmth from the freezing temperatures.

"We had a squirrel in a piano and another one in a beautifully built copper wet bar," Sutton said. "We had to take the whole thing apart to get him out. We've had them in dryer vents and even all the way into dryers."

A maid in the fashionable suburb of Ladue telephoned police to say a burglar had broken into the home of her employer, who was away on a two-week skiing vacation. Police arrived and found a raccoon in a bathtub.

"He had fallen 30-something feet down the chimney and hit his head on a fireplace grate," Sutton said of the intruder. "He needed food and a little attention to his head trauma, but he's doing well."

Another caller said a Great Horned owl was eating the provisions being put out for other animals.

"This woman said she had put out marshmallows for the raccoons and this owl kept eating them," Sutton said. "Can you imagine an owl, which usually eats mice and rats, hungry enough to eat marshmallows? That tells you how desperate the situation was."

Sutton said many of the animals were hungry because the heavy snow cut off their food supply, and she said the quick melt and resulting flooding is causing more problems.

"All the animals like burrows — foxes, groundhogs — are flooded out," she said. "It turns out to be a real they freeze."

"We've had ducks bite. We find them from water."

Sutton said one thing can do to help is providing place for wildlife.

"People are worried feeding the birds; they give a little attention to mammals," she said.

"You can leave a feeder high enough so cats can't get it. Opossums can't get to that. Cat chow is fine, and corn is good for body of course an occasional cookie couldn't hurt."

'Shoot first, ask later' policy spares Baltimore cab driver

BALTIMORE — The city's chief prosecutor staunchly defended his "shoot first, check the facts later" policy and said he will not file charges against a cab driver who killed two passengers who tried to rob him.

Taxi driver Joseph Word, 49, shot and killed the men after one of them pointed a .38-caliber pistol at his head, police said.

The shooting Sunday night occurred less than one week after Baltimore state's attorney William A. Swisher told residents they could use deadly force to defend themselves.

"Whenever a person is in real, honest fear that they, or their loved ones, are about to be seriously injured or killed, then you have the right to defend yourself," Swisher told The News American in an interview published Tuesday. "And the defense goes so far as to use fatal force, meaning to kill the evildoer."

"The law in Maryland says you do not have to retreat from your home. You have the right to shoot first and check the facts out later."

Word picked up the men as fares and one passenger pointed a gun at him and demanded cash.

Word reached under the seat, grabbed his .32-caliber revolver and fired six shots, police said.

The two men, Michael E. Cumbo, 24, and Dexter E. Gray, 26, both of Baltimore, died instantly.

The incident was the second time in two weeks Swisher has declined to prosecute citizens who shot apparent wrongdoers. Last Monday, a tenant shot and killed an apparent burglar as the man fled from an invalid neighbor's apartment.

Swisher said his policy applies only to clear-cut instances of self-defense.
