Angered teachers protest new policy

United Press International
DALLAS — The school district's largest teacher organization plans to protest a new policy of bumping teachers from assignments to make room for administrators forced out of the office and back to the classroom by budget cuts.

But school superintendent Linus Wright argues the policy — which gives preference by seniority and race — is a fair and humane way of realigning displaced personnel.

"The key issue is giving these people the right to pick and choose and bump people right out of a school," Bob Baker, president of Classroom Teachers of Dallas, said. "That's preferential treatment, and that's not good for morale."

But Wright said the displaced administrators were moved into desk jobs to cope with a 1975 desegregation order.

Dallas jury to try a trial-by-television

United Press International
DALLAS — Jurors will tune in to a real-life drama next week when they see three hours of videotaped testimony in the first trial-by-television in Texas.

District Judge John Marshall proved the experiment in litigation after attorneys for both sides requested the unusual trial for Wednesday.

The jury will decide a Dallas woman's lawsuit to win workmen's compensation from her employer's insurance company. After jurors are impaneled, the only live remarks they will hear will be Marshall's reading of the court's legal charge, the judge said.

Television is a major technological innovation of our time, and for us (judges) to ignore any aspect of that potential is to condemn the law to a horse-and-buggy existence," Marshall said.

The trial will be conducted in a special Southern Methodist University School of Law courtroom and university officials will gather juror reactions to the experiment when the trial is over, Marshall said.

The experiment will test whether videotape can replace live testimony without denying rights to a fair and impartial trial to opposing parties in civil cases, he said.

Benefits of a videotaped trial include a shortening of the time required to try a case and a decrease in trial costs.
