'Grease' too slick, committee says; students act out 'Oz'

United Press International RICHARDSON — When high school actors have to stay away from sex, religion and politics, the best they can do is "The Wizard of Oz."

Students at J.J. Pearce High School in this upper-middle-class suburb of Dallas earned $1,200 on the production of "Oz" last weekend, but senior class sponsor Homer Alexander said the group's original choice, "Grease," would have earned even more money.

However, plans to present the musical, set in 1959, were stymied by a decision of a five-member dramatic review committee at the school that determined the plot involving "a girl of high moral standards accepting peer pressure to lower her standards" was not acceptable for a school production.

"Personally, I think it would have been a huge moneymaker," Alexander said Tuesday. "I didn't see anything objectionable in the play, although I can see that from a community Pearce Principal Bob Stamp standpoint, (the committee) backed the decision of the committee might have."

Mayors seem hopeful about nuclear project

United Press International BAY CITY — The mayors of Austin and San Antonio inspected the South Texas Nuclear Project on Tuesday and were optimistic the new construction team can get the troubled project back on the track.

"I feel like we are beginning to get a hold on the future of the project," San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros said.

Austin Mayor Carole McClellan said she feels "a sense of optimism" since the Bechtel Power Corp. and Ebasco Service Inc. have been hired to complete the project, which is millions of dollars over its budget and several years past its deadline.

"They are certainly experienced in the nuclear world, and the transition seems to be going very orderly and efficiently," McClellan said.

The two mayors have been sharply critical in recent months of the project's soaring cost and slow progress and tried to sell their cities' shares.

Houston Lighting & Power Co. is the managing partner of the project. The fourth partner is the Central Power and Light Co. in Corpus Christi.

Cisneros said San Antonio is sticking with the project until at least July, when Bechtel is due to report on how much money and how much longer it will be for the nuclear project is completed.

"We feel our best course now is to stay in there and look at the new information," he said. "Of course, if they report it will cost $2 billion more than expected, well, that's a whole new ball game."

McClellan said although Austin residents have voted to get out of the project, she feels there is no realistic chance of selling Austin's shares until the project begins moving again.

"By September, we may have a different situation where we can have meaningful negotiations for a sale," she said.
