Communication will be important for a successful year. Student Body President Pat Pearson told student senators in an orientation session Wednesday night.

"We've got to communicate with each other," Pearson said. The attitude of the Senate is changing, Pearson said.

Paul Bettencourt, former Judicial Board Chairman, encouraged senators to communicate with each other and to take matters to the Judicial Board only as a last resort.

He also challenged senators not to stereotype each other. "Don't judge somebody by what they wear," Bettencourt said, "listen to what they have to say."

Chris E. Cleveland, executive vice president-appointee, announced applications are being accepted for executive positions and positions on Texas A&M committees. Applications are due at 5 p.m. Friday.

Student Government will be working on two new projects next year — the University administration's Five Year Master Plan and safety awareness, Cleveland said.

The Legislative Study Group and the Conference on Student Government Affairs, formerly under the External Affairs Committee, will have their own committees next year, Cleveland said.

Past Speaker of the Senate Jeff Anthony explained parliamentary procedure to the senators and demonstrated a mock motion with Senators Jim Harris, Keith Carmichael and others.

Anthony outlined the responsibilities of the speaker and speaker pro-tempore, the assistant speaker and then declared these positions open. The Senate will elect members to these positions at its meeting.

The five vice presidents also explained their committees.

Working to get competing airlines at Easterwood Airport and working to move the entrances of Northgate businesses to Patricia Street are two upcoming projects of the external affairs committee, Vice President Jay Holland said.

Gathering student opinion on night exams and team teaching is the immediate goal of the academic affairs committee, Vice President Jolie Mailhos said.
