Fields, Sheen perform in Florida

Reynolds' little theater has big names

United Press International

JUPITER, Fla. — They call it "Burt's Boot Camp," but the big name actors and actresses who perform and teach at the Burt Reynolds Dinner Theater hardly need basic training.

Sally Fields, Martin Sheen, Carol Burnett, Elliot Gould, Farrah Fawcett, Julie Harris: names on a movie marquee which can cause lines to wrap around the block; an appearance on television can make the Nielson ratings skyrocket.

They are accomplished stars who don't need to beg for scripts, let alone travel to a tiny town on Florida's east coast to find work. But they come anyway — to act and teach — and most of it is due to the theater's namesake and sometimes director, Burt Reynolds.

Sheen and Adrienne Barbeau recently had a four-week run of Ken Kesey's "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," Sheen's third appearance at Reynolds' theater. The comic character role of Randle P. McMurphy gave him a chance to shed the "tortured man with a mission" image he had as Captain Willard in "Apocalypse Now" and John Dean in "Blind Ambition."

"One of my problems is that I don't always know where there's a laugh. I don't have a great sense of comedy, and Burt has a tremendous sense. I've always played heavies, heavy emotional stuff," said Sheen.

He said the courage of trying something new, risking failure, pervades the creative atmosphere Reynolds has established in his theater. Sheen said he only returns to the stage for two men: New York Shakespeare Festival's Joseph Papp and Reynolds.

"Burt's idea is to gather people for a community type professional theater and take risks. It means sticking your neck out.

There's nothing safe. You only learn by making mistakes. If you're not willing to make mistakes, you're never going to grow," Sheen said.

After his phenomenal string of major motion picture hits, it would be easy for Reynolds to take it easy. But Reynolds says he has a deep desire and commitment to be "constantly stretching myself — to grow."

It is that commitment to his craft which has led him to direct 18 plays, including Sheen and Julie Kavner in "Two For The Seesaw."

Barbeau, who has been featured in the movies "The Fog" and "Escape from New York," is better known for her role as Carol in television's "Maude" series.

She said she is really more interested in doing movie work than appearing on stage, but Sheen and Reynolds, lured her to Jupiter for the role as the coolly wretched Nurse Ratched.

"I think that what (Reynolds) did for me was to cast me in the first place. Burt had a feeling that this would be something I would do well. Most people think of me and think, 'Oh, Carol on 'Maude,'" she said.

Farrah Fawcett made her debut at the theater in "Butterflies Are Free."

Singer-songwriter Jim Stafford made his stage debut at the theater starring in "Robber Bridegroom."

The theater offers an apprentice program in connection with a $1 million endowed chair at Florida State University, Reynolds' alma mater. About 20 aspiring actors and actresses, all graduates of Florida colleges, audition in April for a spot in the apprentice program at the Burt Reynolds Institute for Theater and keep up with their required classwork. Most of the students earn their masters degree while participating in the program.
