Reagan Brown slips again, makes another racial slur

United Press International
AUSTIN — Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown says food poisoning caused him to use a racial slur in a speech, excerpts of which were broadcast on a Dallas television station.

Brown was obviously stunned in his reference to Booker T. Washington as, "the great black nigger — uh, uh — educator," in a speech before agriculture experts this week. A tape of the slur was included in WFAA-TV's profile of Brown Wednesday in part of a series on candidates for state office.

Brown struggled to regain composure. "Excuse me for that," Brown said with a pained expression clouding his face. "The great black educator — Negro educator," he repeated, with exaggerated pronunciation of the word "Negro." He then completed his speech.

Brown later said the slip was the result of food poisoning.

Brown, a conservative Democrat, faces opposition from liberal Jim Hightower in Saturday's state primaries. The derogatory remark comes at a critical time for him, but does not mark Brown's first public slur toward blacks.

A few months ago Brown distributed a publicity photo to reporters showing him with a Nigerian tribal leader, who was wearing long robes. The man held a certificate presented him by Brown. The certificate proclaimed the Nigerian an "honorary sharecropper."

In 1979, Brown got in political trouble when a group of farmers claimed they had tape recorded a meeting with Brown in which he used a racial slur.

One of the farmers, Marvin

Meek of Plamies, told the farmers he had their support to win.

"There are more one street in Houston are farmers left," Brown told the same meeting, farmers also insulted Bureau president Loupka.

Brown issued a publicly apologizing marks, which he said "under the illogical anger."

2 con artists pull off $2 million fast one

United Press International
CORPUS CHRISTI — They didn't look the part of wheeler-dealers, but Norval and Gloria Mortrud went on a $2.38 million spree that had local businessmen hoping, and hopping — all for naught.

Authorities said Wednesday the couple are suspects in swindle schemes in several other states. Deputies said they arrested Mortrud, 37, on an Amarillo charge that he wrote a bogus $10,000 check to charter a fleet of jets. Mrs. Mortrud, 44, was jailed on a North Dakota charge of an unrevealed nature.

Three weeks ago, they flew into Corpus Christi by private jet and met real estate agent Janice Clark, who said she began winning and dining the couple as potential business clients.

"The very minute he (Mortrud) arrived, he picked up the phone and said, 'I want to buy,'" Clark said.

"They looked like two bums.

They showered only ly, if at all." She said the car fumigated after the couple.

Appearance missing, the couple was million in choice plans even discussed plans officials for a joint to develop a hotel near the tion center. Then a ment check bounced, authorities were notified.

Frank Tompkins, tor, said: "It was almost
