University discipline cases almost double since 1981

by Steven B. Larkin
Battalion Reporter
Discipline cases against Texas A&M students reached a University high of 193 in March, according to figures released by Bill Kibler, assistant director of Student Affairs.

Kibler said 138 of the cases dealt with excessive parking tickets and 55 were general discipline cases. The previous high was 100 cases in May 1981.

April figures showed a decrease with a total of 150 additional discipline cases being reviewed by the Student Affairs office.

Kibler said the number of general discipline cases handled, 101 for March and April, was a significant increase compared to previous semesters.

University discipline cases are divided into two areas: parking violations, for students who have over 10 tickets issued to them; and general discipline cases, for students who violate any of the University's rules and regulations.

Students with more than 10 tickets whose cases are brought to the attention of the Student Affairs Office for the first time are given two options. The student may pay the tickets within three days and face no disciplinary action or may arrange for a hearing with Kibler to discuss why the problem with the tickets occurred and what will be done to solve it.

Students who are repeatedly brought before the Student Affairs office face a number of disciplinary actions, including the possibility of expulsion from the University.

Expulsion for not paying parking tickets has happened in the past, Kibler said.

Kibler said no classification of students at Texas A&M stands out as a leader in the number of discipline cases taken against them, but that early guidance given to freshman might help prevent abuse of the University's rules and regulations.

"If all our freshman could have fish camp experience it would help," he said. "A student needs an adjustment period."

Kibler said he feels the University discipline system is fair and effective.

"The disciplinary process we have is a good one," he said. "When we are through we feel that we have had a good educational impact.

"We try from the beginning to treat each case individually. For three cases of the same type of offense, we might give out three different punishments."

Kibler cited three factors as reasons why students violate University rules: drinking, peer pressure and a subconscious desire to take a risk.

All general discipline require a hearing and Kibler said most students come with a hearing with a good attitude, but, some don't.

"If a student doesn't belong in this environment, then we hesitate to dismiss them," said.

University to sell surplus at auction

Typewriters, calculators, computer terminals, 28 vehicles and other miscellaneous items will be auctioned at the Texas A&M University property auction Saturday morning at 10 in the Purchasing and Stores Building on Agronomy Road. The auction is open to the public and gates will open at 8 a.m. for inspection. The equipment will go to the highest bidder.

Doyle Roberson, supervisor of surplus, said the auction has been held about twice a year for the past three years.

The equipment that is auctioned was given to the surplus department from various departments on campus. Since no other departments can use the equipment in storage, it is auctioned.

The equipment does not have to be stored for a set amount of time, Roberson said, it is when the warehouse is full.

"Proceeds go back into the surplus department plus property accounts, means that some of it goes to the departments selling the items," he said.

Texas A&M got the idea of holding the public auction from other universities which find it profitable, he said.

Those born on this date under the sign of Taurus: Florence Nightingale, British nurse who founded modern nursing, was born May 12, 1820.

On this date in history:

In 1922, the magazine "Broadcast" commented: "The rate of increase in the number who spend at least part of evening listening to radio almost incomprehensible."

In 1937, George VI, crowned king of England, succeeding his brother Edward who abdicated to marry American divorcee Wallis Warfield Simpson.

In 1949, Soviet author announced the end of a blockade of Berlin that lasted 328 days and whose effects were neutralized by the famed Berlin Airlift.

In 1975, the White House closed a Cambodian gunboat had fired upon the U.S. ship "Mayaguez" in the Gulf of Siam and forced it into a Cambodian port.

A thought for the day: American clergyman Fletcher said, "Good will is the mightiest practical force in the universe."
