

Senior cadets take final cruise

Texas Attorney General Mark White will be the keynote speaker for the ninth annual Northern Breakfast Saturday honoring senior cadets of Texas A&M University at Galveston prior to departure on their final summer training cruise.

The traditional breakfast is hosted by Mary Moody Northern of Galveston and will be held in the TAMUG student center named in her honor. Northern and the Moody Foundation, for which she is principal trustee, have long been major supporters of the marine-oriented institution.

In 1971, the students named her honorary commander of the TAMUG corps of cadets, and she also serves as honorary chairman of the TAMUG Board of Visitors, an advisory group for University President William H. Clayton.

About 250 students, faculty, staff and crew are scheduled to sail at 2 p.m. Saturday aboard the "Texas Clipper" for a two-month Caribbean cruise.

The cadets operate the ship under the guidance of TAMUG officials and a master hired from private industry. Capt. Paul W. Kelly will take a leave of absence from the S.S. Texaco Maryland to serve as master for this summer's 18th annual training cruise.

From Galveston the ship heads for New Orleans, where 70 cadets will attend a U.S. Maritime Administration firefighting school at Delgado College.

'Poltergeist' violence prompts Dallas suit

United Press International DALLAS—The city of Dallas has filed suit to stop Friday's local opening of the Steven Spielberg film "Poltergeist" unless the movie is advertised as unsuitable for young people because of its violence.

The film, directed by the man who headed such films as "Jaws" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" is about a suburban family terrorized by ghosts. The city filed suit Tuesday against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and United Artists Entertainment Co., distributor of the film.

Court ruling criticized as 'rank discrimination'

United Press International AUSTIN—The Court of Criminal Appeals in a 6-3 decision ruled Tuesday that a court-appointed attorney is not required to appeal the conviction of indigent defendants beyond the first level in the appellate process.

A court minority, however, called the decision "discrimination of the rank sort" and said the ruling could spell future headaches for Texas courts.

The court, acting in the case of Albert Robledo Ayala who was convicted of burglary, said the U.S. Constitution does not require the state to provide indigents with services of an attorney to seek discretionary review beyond the first step of appeal.

Ayala had demanded that his attorney appeal his conviction to the Court of Criminal Appeals—the second and final stage in the appellate process for criminal cases in Texas.

The attorney filed the appeal, but said it was frivolous and without merit.

"This petition lacks even colorable grounds for review, but we write because it reflects a misconception about the duty of appellate counsel which others may share," Judge Truman Roberts said in the court's majority opinion.

In a dissenting opinion, Judge Sam Houston Clinton warned the court's ruling is "fraught with very high potential for much low mischief."

Clinton said the majority opinion comes perilously close to approving unequal treatment founded upon unreasonable and unsubstantial classification of people who are paupers.

Judge Mavin Teague also wrote a dissenting opinion sharply critical of the majority decision, saying he believed the court is acting legislatively and not judicially.

"I further find that the majority's opinion is filled with sand and booby-traps, which I predict will in the future unnecessarily cause this court's members many, many headaches and problems," Teague said. "It is discriminating to deny an indigent the right to counsel for appeal on the basis of unsubstantiated opinion."

Teague said the majority decision effectively closes the court's doors to indigents who do not have legal skills.

"This, to me, is discrimination of the rankest sort, and should neither be countenanced, tolerated or permitted by this court," Teague said.
