Think tank

Establishing a directory for computer users in the southwest United States. If this is done, Madden says, industrial computer users will be able to know what kind of computer facilities exist and where they are. This will be part of a larger effort to collect and dispense information to the business community.

"We need to move into an area defined with some clarity where we can become well known," Madden said. "I would like to see us move beyond the studies that are on the edges of our expertise. I'd rather see us walk away from a project if we can't do it very well."

"I think there will be some studies that we don't have the expertise to do. We will refer those to someone who could do it, and do it right."

However, Madden emphasized that anybody in the college of business will potentially be available to help with research projects, thereby expanding the "available reservoir of talent."

Madden said he sees the group as a "synergistic vehicle to build a relationship with the business community to get faculty members in college of business faculty interacting with the business community to improve their expertise and of course as a service to industry. The University is a repository of expertise - this provides a vehicle for contact."

Madden said two projects already in the making will provide funds for the group. One is a study for a possible industrial park south of College Station, involving more than $50 million in property slated for high-technology research facilities. The 2,300-acre site will also include housing for some of the industrial park's employees and recreational facilities, including a golf course.

The other project involves a local realtor who wants to know how his company is perceived in the Bryan-College Station area.

This project will employ two graduate students - one doctoral and one master's candidate - with funds provided largely by the realtor.

"With us supposedly in a recession you wouldn't think people would spend that much on research, but the situation itself creates unique problems that need to be solved," Madden said.

"Even Bryan-College Station is being affected by the recession. It's harder for businesses to justify spending money, but we're trying to sell answers to problems; farsighted business people will take the risk just to stay in business."

Madden said the goal is to be self-supporting by the end of the year, and perhaps to make a profit. If a profit is made, he said, the money will be put back into experimental projects.

"We'd like to be able to get to a point where we can develop something on our own and then bring it to the business community," Madden said.

"Some people in the business community have no idea there is a way to access the technology on this campus," he said. "This is an ideal vehicle to make our expertise available to the business community, and also to give faculty members one more touch with a real problem ... and also let us buy research time for them."

"I think anybody that teaches worries that they're getting out of touch. This way, we don't, and we furnish a service to the business community, too."

Refugees' release ordered by judge

United Press International MIAMI — A federal judge Tuesday ordered the government immediately to release nearly 2,000 Haitian refugees held in detention camps in the United States and Puerto Rico.

U.S. District Judge Eugene Spellman handed down his long-awaited decision in a courtroom crowded with immigration lawyers and Haitian activists.

The order, if left unchallenged, would allow for the release of 1,910 Haitians, some of whom have been held for more than a year.

But the government has said it would appeal, which would have the effect of staying the release of the refugees.

The judge set down a seven-point program for the release of each refugee:

- Each Haitian must have an individual sponsor and a voluntary agency sponsor approved by the INS.
The sponsors must agree in writing that Haitians make weekly appearances before a third party.
INS must obtain full identification of all Haitians.
Each Haitian must receive legal documents, including authorization for employment in the United States.

Each refugee must be released regardless of whether he has legal counsel.
Asylum hearings for Haitians with legal representatives must begin immediately. Those that don't have an attorney must report to the INS within 30 days to begin the asylum process.
All Haitians are ordered released for the "full period of the legal process," unless they fail to report in weekly.

Spellman's ruling followed his June 18 decision that the Haitians had been held for the past year illegally. He said the immigration service violated federal administrative procedures last year by failing to warn attorneys and refugee organizations that it would begin detaining refugees pending hearings.

Spellman's decision came in a class-action suit demanding freedom for the Haitian refugees held in the United States and Puerto Rico. He ruled June 18 the refugees were being held illegally.

Current federal policy is to keep refugees confined during the often lengthy asylum process.
