

U.S., China arms policy set

WASHINGTON — The United States and China Tuesday announced a joint communique governing relations with Taiwan, with the United States saying it would gradually reduce arms sales to Taiwan and China vowing to seek peaceful reunification.

The communique, announced simultaneously in Washington and Peking, also said the United States reaffirms there is only one China — which includes Taiwan — and that U.S. relations with Taiwan's government are unofficial.

China pledged to seek peaceful reunification of Taiwan with the mainland, and in a separate statement dropped its demand for an immediate, total cut-off of U.S. arms to the island.

The communique, hammered out after months of negotiations, is a major breakthrough in U.S.-Chinese relations, which had been strained over the arms sales issue. China opposes arms sales to Taiwan, which it regards as an estranged province.

Taiwan's government had no immediate reaction, but its friends in Congress quickly criticized the agreement. Congress does not have veto power over the agreement.

U.S. officials insisted the new policy does not mean the United States is abandoning Taiwan. President Reagan said in a separate statement his friendship with Taiwan is "steadfast and unchanged."

In an attempt to mollify Taiwan, the administration is expected to notify Congress within the next day or so that the United States will continue to co-produce with Taiwan F-5E jet aircraft.

Under the co-production agreement, Northrop Corp. and Taiwan will build 52 F-5E jets during the next 2½ years.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., the leading defender of Taiwan in Congress, called the communique "a bad agreement that demonstrates the influence and duplicity of the permanent bureaucracy at the State Department. It harms Taiwan and violates the Taiwan Relations Act."

Goldwater said if it means the United States will continue to sell arms so long as there is no progress toward reunification of the two Chinas, "it discourages the authorities on Taiwan from ever talking with Peking." If it means that "Communist peace propaganda alone is progress, then we will cut arms sales to Taiwan regardless of her real needs."

The communique said, in part, the United States "intends to reduce gradually its sales of arms to Taiwan, leading over a period of time to a final resolution."
