Philly teacher layoffs approved

United Press International
Philadelphia teachers' union leaders agreed to as many as 600 layoffs in a tentative contract settlement that may allow school to start on schedule for the first time in three years. Yet a third group of Pittsburgh-area teachers voted to strike Monday, affecting 43,730 students.

Talks in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., were deadlocked, and angry union officials vowed to try and remove the Broward County School District superintendent.

Sixty-one teachers in the Southeastern Greene district near Pittsburgh voted overwhelmingly late Sunday to reject an offer by the school board and hold out for more money and other benefits by striking Monday. Some 1,130 students at four schools were told to stay home. Contract talks were tentatively scheduled for today.

In nearby Bursetstown, negotiators for the district and 104 teachers, who struck Friday, were scheduled to meet tonight in hopes of ending the walkout, which kept 2,100 students out of classrooms Monday.

The Allegheny Intermediate Unit Education Association, also on strike in the Pittsburgh area since Tuesday, held talks Sunday in an effort to end the strike that kept at least 12,000 handicapped students at home Monday.

Negotiators, who met until after midnight, reported agreement on seven of 20 disputed issues but were unable to end the walkout.

The impasse in the nation's ninth largest school system, in Fort Lauderdale, was caused directly by Superintendent William McFatter, Classroom Teachers Association President Art Kennedy said Sunday.

Kennedy said the teachers will ask the school board to fire McFatter at a meeting Thursday. He predicted the teachers had a good chance of success.

McFatter could not be reached for comment.

The county's 124,000 public school pupils missed the first day of school Aug. 23 because of the threat of a teacher walkout. But the union failed to decide on a strike, which would be illegal under Florida law, when too few of its members showed up for a vote.

Gospel group opens museum

United Press International
COLUMBUS, Ga. — A decade ago, Little Michael and the Lord Family Singers drew standing-room only crowds in revival tents around the country. But then the 5-year-old faith healer with golden hair and a cherubic face grew up and the Lords became just another traveling gospel group.

The family hopes to change that with the Lord Family Museum and Evangelism Hall of Fame, which opened Sunday.

Located on Victory Drive, a strip near Fort Benning that is cluttered with bars and topless joints, the Hall of Fame is a new beginning for the Lords, who once grossed $90,000 a year on the evangelical circuit.

They spent the last month working to fashion the museum from a dilapidated gas station. It is built around the memorabilia the Lords and Little Michael, now 15, have collected during the years.

Inside the museum are a walking cane, a leg brace and a shoe left behind by people who were healed by Little Michael's prayers, said Little Michael's father, Michael Lord Sr.

The museum features portraits of Little Michael, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Katharine Kuhlman and Oral Roberts.

Another member of the Lord Family's Evangelism Hall of Fame is LeRoy Jenkins, a former television evangelist from South Carolina now serving a 20-year sentence for conspiracy to commit assault on a newspaper publisher and conspiracy to burn down the house of a state highway patrolman.

"We make no value judgments," said the elder Lord. "This is a hall of fame and LeRoy's famous — or infamous."

The Lord family, including Lord's wife, Peggy, and their other son, Eddie, 12, as well as a handful of Columbus residents and the "Proclaimers," a gospel singing group from Brewton, Ala., cut a ribbon Sunday to open the museum and Hall of Fame.

There will be no charge to visit the museum, but donations will be accepted. Visitors also may submit names of evangelists for induction — two of whom will be added each year.

AP vice president, 62, dies

United Press International
NEW YORK — Stanley M. Swinton, vice president of the Associated Press and director of the news agency's World Services division, died at his Manhattan home Sunday of cancer. He was 62.

Swinton traveled to more than 100 countries during his career with the AP, which spanned more than four decades.

His service to the news agency was interrupted only once when he took a four-year leave to become a war correspondent during World War I with the U.S. Army newspaper Stars and Stripes. He continued working until just a few days before his death.
