Sherrill's offensive linemen benefit from weightlifting

United Press International
It is a certainty that no matter how good or bad the Texas Aggies are in the first year of Coach Jackie Sherrill, their offensive line will be no pushover.

Right tackle Tommy Robison of Portland is proof that Sherrill's heightened off-season training program will present a weightier problem for the Boston College Eagles Saturday and for other opponents.

Sherrill left the University of Pittsburgh in January to take the Aggie job, and in one of his first talks with the Aggies he stunned Robison.

"He told us we were the weakest offensive line he had ever seen," Robison said Tuesday. "He told us we would have to build ourselves up and get stronger."

Robison weighed 270 pounds and bench pressed 280 pounds before Sherrill spoke. Now, Robison weighs 290 and can push a bar carrying 340 pounds off his chest. He's one of many Aggies who are stronger this season, and he likes the product of his added strength.

"I feel stronger and confident," he said. "In pass blocking I've been taught to use my upper body and it's easier to get the job done now."

Sherrill said as a result of the weight training his five starters have gained an average of 20 pounds. Left tackle Bryan Dausin of San Antonio, for one, is up 20 pounds to 255.

The average height and weight of the offensive line is 6-4 and 265 pounds. That compares to a 6-3, 246-pound average on last year's team. From left to right across the front are Dausin, Greg Porter (6-3, 250), center Matt Darwin (6-4, 260), Tim Ward (6-5, 275) and Robison. The tight end is 6-2, 227-pound Mark Lewis.

"Our front line is a good one but we cannot get any of them hurt," Sherrill said. "We're very thin behind the starters."

The line blocks for senior quarterback Gary Kubiak of Houston, one of the best passers in Aggie history, and senior running backs Johnny Hector of New Iberia, La., and Earnest Jackson of Rosenberg. Hector and Jackson combined to rush for 1,604 yards as juniors.

During the off-season, Sherrill's program had the Aggie linemen lifting weights four days a week — two of those on their legs and two of those on the upper body.

"It was a cycle of lifting that made a lot of sense. The cycle had a specified number of re-petitions at each weight. It was a good workout — more than we were accustomed to. It wasn't anything that would kill you," he said.
