

Courtroom crowds clap as rapist re-imprisoned

United Press International
TRENTON, N.J. — Joseph "Jo Jo" Giorgianni, the 565-pound rapist whose release from jail caused a national outcry, was back in custody Wednesday to serve a 15-year prison sentence to the glee of crowds who cheered as he laboriously climbed into a police van.

Giorgianni, 33, claimed he would die in jail because he suffers from asthma and obesity-related illnesses.

In deciding to send the bulky steakhouse owner back to prison, Superior Court Judge Richard Barlow said he relied on a videotape of Giorgianni partying at an Atlantic City fight and new medical testimony to decide he could survive a long confinement.

Defense attorney E. John Wherry, whose last-minute appeals to higher courts failed, said he would file another appeal within 24 hours.

Courtroom spectators cheered Barlow's decision Wednesday and Mercer County employees yelled and clapped as sheriff's officers pushed through reporters and led Giorgianni to a van after his hearing.

Giorgianni was convicted in the rape of a 14-year-old girl in 1978.

"We're really celebrating," said Rosie Frallicciardi, a friend of the victim. "The judge gave him what he deserved."

Relatives of the victim, now 18, who has since married and had a child, also praised the verdict.

"I just feel great," said Dee Milewski, 23, the victim's sister, who attended the hearing. "I was holding my breath. This will really help my sister."

Giorgianni was being held in the prison wing of St. Francis Medical Center in Trenton.

Correction Department spokesman James Stabile said Giorgianni will spend several days in the maximum-security ward for comprehensive evaluation and examination.

Prison officials have testified they could build the rapist a larger toilet and bed.

Air Force accidents kill 11

United Press International
Rescuers searching in heavy rain found the wreckage of a military cargo plane that crashed in the Tennessee Appalachians with a nine-man crew, but saw no sign of survivors Wednesday. A helicopter crashed in the South Dakota hills — the third fatal Air Force accident within 24 hours.

The C-141B transport, on a training flight out of Charleston, S.C., Air Force Base when it vanished Tuesday night, slammed into Hoopers Bald Mountain in the Tellico Wildlife Management Area about 30 miles from Tellico Plains, Tenn.

Flag Sgt. Bob Miskowitz of the rescue coordination center at Scott Air Force Base near East St. Louis, Ill., said the wreckage was found by members of the Tennessee Civil Air Patrol, two park rangers and a Monroe County deputy.

A UH-1 helicopter went down Wednesday while working near Minuteman missile silos about 20 miles of Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D., killing one crewman and injuring two.

The injured were in stable condition at the base hospital. Names of the victims were not released.

An Air Force jet en route to Ohio from California crashed during a thunderstorm late Tuesday in southern Illinois, killing the pilot.

Mom tosses tots, gets no bail

United Press International
PHILADELPHIA — A woman accused of throwing her two children off a bridge into the Schuylkill River then jumping in herself has been ordered held without bail on a murder charge.

Knarvie Walden, 30, was ordered held Wednesday, during a bedside arraignment in the Medical College of Pennsylvania Hospital where she was in guarded condition with internal injuries and severe bruises. A preliminary hearing was set for Thursday.

She was charged with the murder of her son, Kavan Moore, 7. The body of the second son, Carl Moore, 6, has not been recovered.

Shocked neighbors said they had no idea as to why the woman would harm "two of the best kids you would ever want to meet."

Police recovered Kavan's body from the river Tuesday about two hours after Walden walked to the center of the City Avenue Bridge and reportedly threw both children over the railing, then plunged in after them.

Walden was rescued by off-duty police officer Robert Kirn and his companion, who were fishing.

"She was a beautiful person," neighbor James Workman said. "I can't think of anything that would make her hurt her kids. They were two of the best kids you would ever want to meet."

Children's blood lead levels test higher than believed

United Press International
BOSTON — More preschool children have health-threatening levels of lead in their blood than previously thought, with black youngsters at a far greater risk than others, a national survey showed Wednesday.

While blood lead levels were higher among blacks than whites of all ages, the study in the New England Journal of Medicine found 18.6 percent of black, inner-city and low-income children with concentrations six times greater than their white counterparts.

The four-year study of nearly 28,000 Americans provides the first information on blood lead levels in the nation's population, to doctors said.

"These new findings come as an agonizing confirmation of the fears of many concerned with the health impact of continued lead pollution," said an accompanying journal editorial, noting that 600,000 tons of lead are added annually to the environment.

While acknowledging most children in the study were not suffering from lead poisoning, the editorial said there was a danger the high levels could disturb the metabolism of vitamin D and cause psychological and behavioral disorders.

"How could a nation with such remarkable achievements in preventive medicine allow this preventable condition to afflict 4 percent of its preschool children — or worse, 18.6 percent of its poor black children?" it asked.

The National Health and Nutrition Examination survey showed 4 percent of children 6 months through 5 years old have levels exceeding the accepted limit.

Overall, it said 12.2 percent of blacks compared with 2 percent of whites had blood lead levels that could threaten physical or mental health.

"Blood lead levels were consistently higher among blacks than among whites," the report said, with the "difference found in children and adults, in rural residents and urban dwellers, and in families with low, moderate and high incomes."

However, concentrations increased as family income decreased among both blacks and whites.

Lead levels in young children also increased with the degree of urbanization. Blacks again had higher concentrations than whites in large urban, smaller urban, and rural areas, the study showed.

In addition, lead levels declined with age until adolescence and declined again moderately after 45 to 54, it said.

Roberts, with the National Center for Health Statistics in Maryland, said: "What we are finding is two to three times as much evidence of elevated lead levels than had been found previously."

$3 million suit hits grandma

United Press International
LEXINGTON, Ky. — The grandmother of two boys who drowned in her swimming pool is being sued by the boys' parents for nearly $3 million.

Bobby and Dinah Lockhart filed suit in Fayette Circuit Court, claiming Lockhart's mother, Wilma Faye Lockhart, was negligent in caring for their children, Jeffrey, 4, and Jeremy, 3.

The couple contended the grandmother violated state building codes requiring "adequate enclosures" around pools.

"The rights of these children should not change merely because you're involved with a relative," their attorney, David Weinberg, said Wednesday.
