winter, and Arnold hopes to start a canoe sailing class at the Bryan lake next spring.

"The only thing is that it is pretty poor and it's an adventure trying to get a program going with the facilities," Arnold said. "The city is bending over backward to help get this going."

Brochures for these courses are available at Bryan Utilities building, Keyboard Center, Wood Nautilus, The Looking Glass and The Plaster Patch. If interested in the program, contact Cindy Arnold at 3452 after noon to request a brochure in the mail.

One-hour pics offered by service

by Patti Schwierke
Battalion Reporter
If you've got a roll of film developed but don't want to wait a day or more, two new one-hour photo developing centers may interest you.

The two shops, Fast Foto and Quick As A Flash, develop film in an hour because of a relatively new processing method.

James Page of Quick As A Flash said this process produces pictures as good as those developed in a day and offers competitive prices. The film comes out of the processor in negative form and is then examined by a technician to make adjustments before it is printed. Stewart Mitchell of Quick As A Flash said, "Next, the film is processed through the paper processor which prints the negative pictures are then packaged for the customer."

Page said the new developing method is only three years old and is better than the old method because negatives are checked both by hand and by a computer for just factors which affect the picture's quality.

But Arch Baker of Canon Photo Center, a conventional processing center, said the primary objective of the one-hour processors is to operate the machine. He said if the film is done properly at a one-hour photo processing center, it should be technically indistinguishable, but, "like everything else, you get what you pay for and good work takes time."
