Fort Worth hosts cutting horse show

United Press International
FORT WORTH — In a city dubbed "Cowtown," the value of a good cutting horse is well known.

Cutting horses are trained to isolate one animal from a herd on the range. The action requires the horse to shift quickly back and forth to screen the cow from the herd and many times to anticipate the movement of the cow.

Today, top cutting horses are involved in competition as much as actual ranch work.

"Cutting horse competitions are quickly becoming the richest of all the equine sports," said Zack Wood, secretary-treasurer of the National Cutting Horse Association.

The NCHA was founded in Fort Worth in 1946 by a group of ranchers seeking to advance the prestige of the cutting horse. The group now has members in 49 states.

NCHA will hold a derby at Will Rogers Coliseum beginning today. Some 312 4-year-old horses are entered in the competition which has a purse of $266,000, the largest in the show's 12-year history.

The winner will collect

$63,000 in first place prize money.

Gompers honored

United Press International
SAN ANTONIO — AFL-CIO leader Lane Kirkland told a Labor Day crowd gathered at the Alamo to dedicate a statue of Samuel Gompers to be true to the goals of one of the early leaders of the labor movement.

"This precious and perishable asset, what Gompers called the 'womanhood and manhood of American workers,' is being squandered by an administration that knows the price of everything in dollars and the price of nothing in human value," Kirkland said.

"We shall be true to those enduring goals. We want more school houses, less jails; more learning, less crime; more leisure, less greed; more justice, and less revenge."
