Wallace primary win expected in Alabama

United Press International — George Wallace, 63, admitting to past "mistakes" and insisting his paralysis would not interfere with his ability to govern, was favored in Tuesday's Alabama Democratic gubernatorial primary.

Most polls showed Wallace leading five contenders, but it appeared unlikely the former arch segregationist would gain a majority of the vote in his bid to return to the governor's mansion for an unprecedented fourth term.

Wallace started the race well ahead of the pack, but just before the election most polls indicated a runoff is likely. Even if Wallace wins the nomination, he will have to beat a tough Republican opponent in November.

Conservative Montgomery Mayor Emory Folmar is unopposed for the GOP nomination.

If a runoff is required, it appears either Lt. Gov. George McMillan or state House Speaker Joe McCorquodale will be the one to face Wallace Sept. 28.

Former two-term Alabama Gov. James "Big Jim" Folsom,

73, and political newcomer Reuben McKinney also are seeking the GOP nomination. Democrat Gov. Fob James did not seek re-election.

Last month, in a speech to the Alabama Democratic Conference, the state's largest black political group, Wallace said,

"I'm not asking for forgiveness. Everything I've done has been honest."

But he added, "I've made some mistakes in the past."

The conference declined to support Wallace, endorsing instead McMillan, a progressive moderate.

The Alabama primary is one of four nationwide.

In Connecticut, Rep. Toby Moffett, a liberal Democrat, was expected to win the right to battle Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker in the fall.

Voters in Florida were expected to choose Democratic Gov. Bob Graham and five-term Republican Rep. L.A. Bafalis in the governor's race. State Sen. Van Poole was favored to win the GOP nomination and face Democratic Sen. Lawton Chiles, who has no primary opponent, in November.

In Arizona, Senate President Leo Corbett, a Republican, was a slight favorite to face Democratic Gov. Bruce Babbitt in the general election. Babbitt and Sen. Dennis DeConcini, both Democrats, are unopposed in the primaries.

4 Catholic sisters question dismissal

United Press International — Four nuns fired from their teaching jobs have arrived at New Hampshire Supreme Court to the cheers of supporters to demand from their bishop the reason for their dismissal.

The four nuns, employed at the Sacred Heart School in Hampton, sued Roman Catholic Bishop Odore Gendron last March after he refused to renew their contracts.

Church historians have said it is the first suit of its kind.

"All we want to know is why we were fired," said Sister Catherine Colliton, one of the four fired teachers.

The nuns, accompanied by their attorney, were welcomed by about 40 cheering supporters, most of them parents who pulled their youngsters out of the school to protest the dismissals.

Principal Jeff Quinn said attendance has declined by about 100 students down to about 130 for Tuesday's reopening of classes.

Sister Catherine said the nuns only wanted to know why their contracts were not renewed.

"It's so simple and cut and dried. You can't even dismiss a child without giving that child a valid reason," the teacher said.
